Let me tell you a story. One day the Buddha went to a village to teach and encountered much trouble. His adviser, Venerable Ananda told him that he should move onto the next village. The Buddha protested. He said,"How can I leave these people when they don't fully understand my teachings. They will think I am incompetent. They will always abuse me." He asked his advisor,"Where is your true patience ? Where is your true strength ? When people abuse you, you should thank them."

This has happened to me as a monk. Sometimes it is very difficult when we go round and see young people.

One day when I went visiting, I felt a stone hit me. I was very hurt and very angry. I looked around but there was no one. So I looked over the fence and saw a small boy. My heart sank. But I was so angry that I picked up a stone to throw back. Then I thought to myself that it was not good for a monk to throw stones. I was fuming and felt so angry!

I waited and slowly my anger passed, and I dropped the stone that I had earlier wanted to throw with so much acrimony. I learned a lesson from that little boy. I learned to control my anger.

Patience is always so important, like the foundation of a house or the roots of a tree. You must understand your own defilements, and weaknesses.

You must have a lot of patience. You must have a lot of loving-kindness towards others. For example, if you can live in the forest without complaining about the insects or the wild animals, then you can live anywhere. You should try not to complain about mosquitoes, bad people, lack of comfort, or sickness.

If you think you must always have a good room, or a good friend, then you can't have a good life. This is because it shows you can not be satisfied.

Attachment to good people is also a problem, but not attachment to bad people! Sometimes we wish we could be with our good friends always, but this is not possible, and it will bring us trouble.

If you understand your friends properly, you can reduce your conflicts.

You should all know what happens when you play tennis... You know that the ball will always be hit towards the weaker partner! You should look at your friends and understand that the weaker ones will attract far more trouble! You must have loving-kindness towards them, and try to help them.

Tolerance is also very important for practising Buddhism. You must have something to show others that Buddhism is good. Buddhism originally grew in one mind. When you are by yourself, you must depend on your own virtues.

Always try and support your friends. Help yourself but never expect help from others and practise a lot.

After I first came to Australia, I had a bad dream about having to speak to hundreds of Australians. (This was just after that young boy threw a stone at me.) I was afraid of saying something that might upset them in explaining about Buddhism. I dreamt that all the people threw sticks and stones at me. So I ran to the police station and all the police ran out and protected me.

This dream reminded me that we will be accepted by law abiding people, for as long as we are virtuous. If we behave ourselves, we will be accepted and respected by the people.

Q1 Why do some people seem to be compulsive liars ?

A1 If we never seem to benefit from doing good, and some people seem to benefit from doing bad, then they will be encouraged to continue their bad habits.

Sometimes due to our past actions, it takes a while before we can receive goodness and kindness from others. Once lying becomes a habit, it is very difficult to break out of it.

However, once they know the trouble they bring from lying, they might stop it. Then they may begin to see the virtue of sincerity, and the advantages it brings.

Q2 My friend is being hurt in a relationship. What can I do?

A2 If your friend has to stay with her partner, it may mean your friend does not have enough good virtue to stand on her own. Perhaps she is always depending on the other for her own happiness, and she is not strong enough to be by herself.

Remember my tennis example where the weak partner always seems to receive the ball the most. You must help them. Perhaps this is a situation we see so often, where one person is causing a lot of trouble, and another living with ignorance and delusion gets very upset as a result.

Q3 If we should not attach ourselves to good people & things, should we seek out more bad people?

A3 If all good friends stayed with us, you would miss them and you would also depend on them. Life doesn't work that way. Your attachment to them will cause trouble to you later. Remember the Eight Worldly Conditions; gain & loss, fame & insignificance, praise & blame, suffering & happiness. - If you start collecting things, then your room becomes messy. You will be very far away from the Buddha's teachings! It is our duty to train our mind to go beyond this.

You should be able to give away all your material things for the happiness of others. What will be left over is the purity, wisdom and satisfaction of giving as compensation for your action. Eventually you may also realise that it is wiser not to attach to name or fame.

For example, when the last day come for Venerable Serabutang, he did for the last time, all the normal things. He attended his normal duties and asked all the monks to come. He told them,"When I leave here today I will not come back." - Just like that, with no attachments.

However, for Venerable Ananda, when his stepmother passed away, ohh, he lost a lot of tears! He was very attached, - even though his stepmother had told him,"I am free from the trouble that this body brings. I am going to Nibbana.- Do not feel sorrow for me!"

The very good are able to stay calm. They can help teach people not to have too many attachments and troubles. For the rest of us, we just have to build up our virtues.

Q4 What if some people become upset about our religion or our practice ?

A4 We should forget and forgive them. Otherwise bad action will result in bad kamma which will bring more suffering. If you dare to harm or hurt the person who is very sincere in their concern for you, you will bring great harm to yourself. We should send our loving-kindness to them, help them, and support them. This should always be our long term strategy! After a while perhaps, they will then see through their own ignorance and delusion.

Let me tell you a story about Venerable Telajunmun For his disciples who practised under him, he was very strict. But for those who did not know or understand Buddhism, he would do and allow everything. He always asked them to come and join with him and he would feed them. He never said anything against them, and always gave them his loving kindness. Later, many joined him, and were able to respect and abide by his strict rules of practise. In this way we should help all people, not just Buddhists but all living beings. Always do your best.

Some children come to the temple for incense. They love the Chinese incense which has a very sweet smell, but which burns quickly. When the little children come, they always ask for some and I immediately give it to them. But sometimes I have to hold back, otherwise they will come every day and disturb us. So we must use wisdom and not spoil them.

As monks we realise it is very important to be kind to all people, so we hope they will carry the spirit of the Buddha on. But we must have loving-kindness for all, including our enemies. If you find you can't stay with someone, then I'm afraid, it means you are not practising Buddhism at all.

Q5 What are the aims of your temple?

A5 We don't have too many ambitions. We must look after ourselves. For me, I try to help wherever I am needed. Sometimes I am asked to give talks in Melbourne or Adelaide. If just one person can understand Buddhism through my teachings then I am happy. I try to lead a simple life.

I remember when I went to India to see where the Buddha was enlightened. Ahh, it was so simple. The cave where the Buddha used to meditate was only 2.6 metres wide. That impressed and inspired me very much!

Let me give you a final example. The frog is always making a noise serenading other frogs. He invites trouble so that he can be killed! A diamond never says anything under the ground. Yet the name and fame of the diamond goes before it. If you are a good person, you should try to be like the subterranean diamond rather than the noisy frog!

You should always say,"May I be well and happy. May all living beings be well and happy!" and spread your compassion and loving-kindness to all.

Abridgement of Dhamma talk given on Friday, 7th May 1993 at the UNSW as reported by Mick Kiddle. Venerable Chao Khun Samai, is one of the two Venerable Patrons of the Unibuds. He is also Abbot of the Wat Pa Buddharangsee temple, at Lot 112 Junction Road, Leumeah NSW 2560.

In 1910, a Venerable U Sasana Dhaja, an Englishman ordained in Burma, arrived in Sydney. (He had visited Australia a few years earlier as a Christian missionary !) He supported himself by selling antique alibaster statues, and was somewhat of a shady character. He said,"Although Buddha was the light of Asia, Christ was the light for the world." So he was really still a Christian at heart.

In 1915, five Buddhist monks of German origin were consigned to Sydney for internment. As you will remember, England and its colonies were at war with Germany at that time. One of these monks was the former world famous violinist, Anton Gueth, who as Venerable Nyanatiloka was one of the greatest pioneers of Western Buddhism.

In the 1950s, Marie Byles, one of the first women to practise law in Sydney wrote six books, four on Buddhist topics, and she also kept a complete collection of the Tipitaka. She came out from England at age 11 in 1911, and gave many theosophical broadcasts on Radio 2GB on Buddhism as well as preaching the Dhamma at the Unitarian Church in Sydney. (She died in 1979.)

Leo Berkeley, a Dutchman met Sir Lalita Rajapakse in 1952, the then Sri Lankan Minister of Justice who was returning to Colombo. Sir Lalita recited the following Dhammapada verse to Leo:

By ourselves is evil done, by ourselves we pain endure,

By ourselves we cease from ill, by ourselves we become pure,

No one can save us but ourselves, no one can and no one may.

We ourselves must walk the Path, Buddhas only point the way.

Leo was very impressed by this wisdom, and was keen to know more. Later, after being introduced to Venerable Narada Maha Thera in Colombo, Leo received the Dhamma. On his return to Australia, Leo put an advertisement in the Sydney Morning Herald for those interested in establishing a Buddhist society. Twenty people responded, and they began meetings at Leo Berkeley's house.

Soon after this group was formed in 1952, a seventy year old, American born Buddhist nun - Sister Dhammadinna arrived in Australia. She had been living in Sri Lanka for 30 years. Subsequently Leo Berkeley provided accommodation for her and she joined their group.

The Australian Overseas Aid program in the form of the Colombo plan brought many new students to Australia, and I (Graeme Lyall) was involved in welcoming them and taking them on picnics. After meeting a Tibetan monk, I became interested in Buddhism and contacted the Theosophical Society who referred me to Sister Dhammadinna. Sister Dhammadinna conducted dhamma talks and meditation at the home of Mr & Mrs Leo Berkeley. Usually around 15 to 20 people attended these talks and she took 8 of us for personal instruction. She was very explicit about her expectations. She attempted to dissuade her fellow tenants from their carnivorous habits by remarking, as she passed their Sunday roast lamb preparations,"Do I smell a corpse incinerating here??"

At Vesak in 1952, our group of 8 took refuge for the first time.

In May 1953, the Buddhist Society of NSW was formally constituted as a society and Leo Berkeley was unanimously elected as President.

In 1954, Venerable Sayadaw U Thittila arrived from Burma and dispelled many misconceptions about Buddhism that plagued Australian society at several public lectures.

In 1956, two monks arrived from Thailand, Phra Dhammadiraja Muni an abbot who spoke little English, and Phra Sumangalo alias Reverend Robert Stuart Clifton, Superior General of the Western Buddhist Order (Soto Zen). Phra Sumangalo was a charismatic figure who formed a (short-lived) Young Buddhist Association. During their visit, a crisis occurred. Unbeknowns to Phra Dhammadiraja Muni, Phra Sumangalo, in his role as Reverend Robert Stuart Clifton, Superior General of the Western Buddhist Order was privately ordaining his followers, both male and female, as priests in his "Order". These extra-Theravadin activities soon came to the notice of his Abbot and his tour of Australia came to an abrupt end. He and the Abbot hurriedly returned to Thailand where, no doubt, Phra Sumangalo faced the music!

In 1959, the Buddhist Society of NSW combined with the Buddhist Society of Victoria to form the Buddhist Federation of Australia.

In 1960, a lineage holder in the Chinese Ch'an tradition arrived in Sydney and stayed until the end of 1961. He was the famous master Hsuan Hua, who gained the impression that there were no Buddhists amongst the local Chinese community as he was largely ignored, and was at one stage, on the verge of starvation due to lack of support. He left for California, and with the support of many followers, he established a monastic centre known as the "City of Ten Thousand Buddhas."

In 1973, Venerable Chao Khun Parityatikavi and the well known teacher and author Venerable Khantipalo arrived from Thailand. Initially, they rented a house in Eastlakes before setting up Wat Buddharangsee in Stanmore in 1975. The opening ceremony, on Vesak Day 25th of May 1975, was performed by His Royal Highness, Crown Prince Vajiralongkorn, in the presence of His Highness The Most Venerable Somdet Sangharaja Phra Nyanasamvara, Supreme Patriach of Thailand and ten visiting Bhikkhus from Thailand.

Wat Buddharangsee became the focal point for Theravadin Buddhism in Sydney, a function formerly performed by the Buddhist Society of NSW. It has proved to be so popular that it has rapidly become to small too serve its congregation, so a large tract of land was purchased at Lumeah, south of Sydney, where a traditional Thai style Wat Pa Buddharangsee was opened in 1988.

Chao Khun Samai stayed at Wat Budharangsee when he arrived and tried very hard to develop Buddhism throughout the community. He invited Vietnamese and Sri Lankan groups to the temple that were outside his own tradition.

In 1978, Venerable Khantipalo set up Wat Buddha Dhamma at Wiseman's Ferry. He was a Theravadin monk for 30 years, wrote many books, and made a large contribution towards spreading the Dhamma before joining the Nioxin group last year. (Venerable Khantipalo gave a great deal of support to Unibuds during our earlier years with English Dhamma talks, workshops, and hosting Unibuds retreats at Wiseman's Ferry. -MK)

As an outcome of the tragic war in South-East Asia, many Buddhist refugees arrived in Australia in the late 1970s and 1980s. At the end of 1979, a group of Vietnamese refugees met in Glebe and formed the Vietnamese Society of NSW. Their first ceremonies were held at the Thai temple Wat Buddharangsee in Stanmore.

In 1985, the Vietnamese were able to build their first temple, the Phap Bao Temple at Bonnyrigg. Later, the first Vietnamese monk to arrive in Australia, Most Venerable Thich Phuoc Hue established another Vietnamese temple; the Phuoc Hue Temple in Wetherill Park in 1987.

In the early 1980s, the Korean Dharmakaya Society was formed at Summer Hill, and many Tibetan groups came to Australia and formed Buddhist organisations around that time.

June 1985 saw the arrival of Venerable Mahinda, who has had a long association with both the Buddhist Missionary Society in Kuala Lumpur and the Singapore Buddhist Mission. He was appointed Bikkhu in charge of the Hock Cheng See Buddhist Vihara at Ambarvale.

In August 1986, Venerable Mahinda suggested that an Australian Buddhist Mission could be set up on similar lines to the B.M.S. and Singapore Buddhist Mission. During its formative years, the Australian Buddhist Mission has organised several meditation retreats, Buddhist Youth Camps with participants from several ethnic groups including Australian born, Burmese, Cambodian, Malaysians, Sri Lankans, and Vietnamese. The aim of the camps was not only to spread the Dhamma, but also to promote mutual understanding and friendship amongst all groups.

In 1989, the Mission sponsored a two year Missionary tour of one of Thailand's great meditation masters, Phra Ajahn Yantra Amaro. In 1990, Mrs Elizabeth Gorski generously donated one hundred acres of land in Bundanoon, so that a retreat centre in the Thai forest tradition could be established in Australia by Phra Ajahn Yantra. This new centre is known as Sunnataram Forest Monastery.

In 1988 Venerable Sayadaw U Zagarabhivamsa, (or Venerable Dr U Zagara as he is known to the Unibuds!) took up residence as Abbot at a rented cottage in North Parramatta to serve the small Burmese community. Venerable Sayadaw U Zagarabhivamsa is a highly respected teacher and scholar, being formerly a professor of Abhidhamma and Pali language at Nalanda Buddhist Institute in India. In 1989, larger premises were purchased for the Burmese Buddhist Society at Merrylands.

In 1977, Venerable Tsang Hui arrived in Australia from Taiwan. In 1979, from a rented house in Redfern, he established the Hwa Tsang Monastery. Being a qualified teacher, he set up and conducted academic classes and helped many students gain places at Sydney Universities and graduate to the professions. The monastery later moved to Greenacre and then to its present location in Homebush West. After overcoming much unsympathetic and racist opposition from local residents, Sydney's first "purpose built" Chinese Buddhist temple was opened in 1993.

Some of the Buddhist groups set up in the 1980s, were by migrants wishing to control their fellow countrymen. Sangha did not stay long at such temples before disputes arose with the sponsoring lay-people who were really trying to use the temple for their own exclusive purposes. Other migrant groups have experienced power struggles between different factions. As a result, community patronage has been split between different temples.

As an outcome of Buddhist students matriculating to the universities, joined by overseas students studying in Australia, university Buddhist societies were formed in the early 1980s. Unibuds was founded in 1981 with Venerable Tsang Hui's and Chao Khun Samai's support. A year later, Sydney University Buddhist Society was formed. In 1992, a Buddhist Society was formed at Macquarie University.

Abridgement of Dhamma talk given on Friday, October 1st 1993 at the UNSW as reported by Mick Kiddle. Graeme Lyall is President of the Australian Buddhist Mission, and is the author of several Buddhist books, including "An account of the history and development of Buddhism in New South Wales" on which this talk was based. Graeme has very kindly donated several copies of his book to the Unibuds library, and it makes very interesting reading.

into this path it takes us a certain amount of wisdom.

Right understanding refers to our understanding of fundamental truths about life and the world around us. We should try to understand two laws; the Four Noble Truths and the law of cause and effect - karma. This is very basic and fundamental to Buddhism.

Every action has a reaction just like Newton's 3rd law of motion. Karma has both physical and moral effects. Good begets good and evil begets evil. A good doer experiences evil as long as the good karma ripens not. There are people who indulge in wrong things and appear to have good lives. The results of their actions will come back to them sooner or later. Also those who perform unwholesome or bad actions are reborn in unfortunate states.

When you practice with a higher, more peaceful state of mind, your higher understanding of karma allows you to transcend worldly existence. You must train your minds. For example, you hear me now, the vibration of my voice box - this is the cause. The sound hits your eardrum... The process of hearing involves so many individual causes and effects If you understand this, that when causes arise, affects also arise, your wisdom for responding to other events in your life will improve.

We must understand dhukka. Dhukka is suffering, or unsatisfactoriness. Associating with people or conditions or unfulfilled desires, subjects you don't like, people you don't enjoy, is dhukka. For example, how long can you laugh? One day? Two? Three? Even laughter is dhukka. You cannot maintain your laughter.

The Five grasping Aggregates are also dhukka. These five characteristics of self-awareness are; 1 Physical form which has given rise to the body, 2 Feelings and sensations, 3 Perception, 4 Mental formations, thoughts and imagination, and 5 Conciousness.

If you don't grasp the aggregates, they come and go. If you grasp the aggregates, that is, if you grab your thoughts, objects and you think it is real, it will condition some emotions in you. Then you will attach yourself to the feelings/emotions you have generated to the sensations/object you have grasped. After you have attached yourself to something and you lose it, you get very upset.

To overcome suffering you need to overcome your craving. You should follow the Noble Eightfold Path and try to always see things as they are.
minerals. Whether you are Buddhist, Christian, or Muslim, this change will happen to you!

The truth of existence is that everything is changing. Anything that is changing is dhukka. Is your body yours? Can you keep your body? Your hair, which you love so much keeps falling out. Also your nails, your teeth, your skin... They are all dying cells, but you cling to them, cling to your eyebrows, and you give them pastel.

Delusion is looking in the mirror and thinking you can keep your beautiful looks. The body is made up of elements. When you die and they put you in a box, your body will be reduced to carbon and perhaps a few

But wisdom is not the pure accumulation of knowledge and theories. These dhamma talks you attend I hope will help compliment your university studies. Tell me which Faculty teaches you how to overcome your craving ? Which Faculty helps you overcome your anger ? Everytime you radiate thoughts of loving kindness to all sentient beings, you are building your wisdom. Your compassion helps others, removes their fears, and anxieties and gives them confidence. I hope you have all gained some wisdom this evening !

quite interesting. Most people say,"I'd just pray!"

Tonight I want to talk about love and compassion. I feel love is wanting to be happy, and for wanting others to be happy. However, Western love is normally about,"MY NEEDS" and,"MY ATTACHMENTS". Remember that song; "Baby can you see what you are doing to me?". Elvis Presley is actually singing about attachment and hurting, rather than love. Attachment is hanging on to things. In a relationship, sometimes you hang on to people because you don't feel good about yourself or you don't have high self-esteem. If you hang on to what we call "Love" in the West, it is often attachment. The more concretely we see things, the more attached we feel. If anything threatens our relationship, or we are afraid of losing it, then we get very upset!

Tomlim practice is about learning to love yourself. The ego grasping mind that wants things and has lots of attachments, experiences greater unsatisfactoriness. Ego grasping makes you feel more unsure about yourself. If you are serious, you must practise detachment yourself. Be kind and nice to yourself. Learn to accept things. Look honestly at yourself and do not feel guilty. For example using visualisation, imagine a beautiful spring morning with clean fresh air and birds. Already you feel better. This is one way of developing your inner self. In the dhamma, the Buddha said that their are infinite ways and infinite beings. Don't give yourself a hard time. None of us are Buddhas, none of us are enlightened. Let us accept our karmas.

Buddha taught us that we shouldn't hurt anybody. We can have goals and ambitions, but sometimes we get caught up with how everybody else might expect us to live. In the NY Wall Street stockmarket crash, I was amazed how many people jumped out of buildings. People obviously could only measure their worth in terms of money. They must have had such low self-esteem. In ancient India, Buddhists decided it was easier to control the mind than the external environment. But now is called the degenerate age. Look at how Western materialism has almost destroyed the planet. Degenerate illnesses coming from the degenerate age are through misunderstandings of reality.

I went to the pub the other night with flashing lights. and poker machines and the DJ added more music. I couldn't talk to my friend it was so noisy and distracting. The proprietors probably believe that lots of noises and lights brings more happiness to people's minds. We in the West are so obsessed with sex and stimulation.

Q1 Hasn't there always been illnesses ?
A1 Yes but more illness and greater pollution has introduced an even greater range of illnesses than before. This is even wiping out animal species. Everything exists because it is caused to exist. The Dalai Lama taught; If you want peace,- you don't kill for it and you don't die for it. You find peace within yourself.

Twenty to thirty years ago Westerners couldn't accept or understand the illness linkage between mind and body. For example visualize three people- a friend, a stranger, and an enemy. Analyse the difference between these three people. People change roles throughout your life as you know. Your friend may become a stranger to you, your enemy may become your friend, and the stranger may become your enemy! How does this suggest you should treat others always ? As your friend ? Or as your enemy or stranger ?

Another meditation you can do is one to get rid of the ego grasping mind that we have. Visualize receiving black (taking another person's suffering), and white (giving love). Sometimes this is quite difficult. You have to practise it in stages. First try breathing in and taking in another's suffering through your central channel. Let this shatter your self-grasping mind that gets threatened when talking of death. The mind causes all problems and you can get rid of your negativities in this way. As you breathe out, direct your thoughts of white love and compassion to all living beings. Try this for five minutes now. You should come out of it feeling great inner peace.

In an emptiness meditation, we think about an independent existence. Where do we exist ? From which point ? Our mind is a stream of impermanent thoughts. One thought comes from the thought before it. We exist in body and mind, but we have no focal point for existence. We always try to see ourselves as seperate and concrete, but we are not. The end result of this meditation should be to feel that you have given love and compassion to other living beings. A Lama once said,"If you can get rid of one negative habit in your lifetime you are improving." So do your best!

Miss Chris Roberts has been a Buddhist for 12 years, and is a teacher at the Australian Tibetan Institute of Medicine based in Sydney. The Institute was established in mid 1992.

Buddha stressed suffering very much. Why did he do this ? If we don't feel any suffering in our life, then there is no need to practise religion, be it Buddhism, Christianity, Islam or whatever. The purpose of religion is to help all sentinent beings. The sufferings of change are experienced by everyone all the time.

For example after you have been walking, you feel tired, and after you sit down, you feel happy. But after that you want to get up and walk again. The same applies when you are hungry or being bored with a friend. If it was real happiness that you were experiencing, then the more you do it the happier you should feel. Initially when you do something you have a pleasant or happy feeling, but after you indulge in something for too long, then you feel dissatisfied.

If we look at our daily life, we go from one object to another and we have so many ups and downs. The Buddha talked about ego-grasping suffering and the self-centred mind. We should check the way we feel about ourselves. For due to this misconception we create a strong gap between others(Dualism) and ourselves - this causes both friends and enemies to arise.

Because we have "me", we have attachment. How can we enjoy food or a certain person without desire or attachment ? What caused the happiness ? When do we actually feel happy ? Is it when the juice of the orange meets the tongue ? Is that when we can say we enjoy the moment ?

In fact if there initial attachment, then we will not enjoy the experience. Attachment is an exaggeration of the quality of the object or person. Attachment magnifies and projects the concept of the object to be perfect and desirable in our mind. If everybody could view the same thing with the same attachment, every one would feel the same level of desire for it. But different people view different objects with different attachments. This demonstrates that whatever we see is due to our own personal attachment, and it never exists, except in our mind. Attachment can make our friends seem so pleasant. Yet when we get to know them well, we often have so many doubts about them!

What is the right partner ? What is the right way to look for such attachments ? What is the right path for our mind ? Knowing our mind is the best partner!

The mind completely projects good and negative things. If we have the right mind, then this can be a great partner. We can see people without attachment or desire. If a repulsive object comes before our mind, our mind will exaggerate its features. Our attachment will also bring us great suffering. What really bothers us, is mental suffering. What destroys peace in the mind is anger, hatred, and resentment. This is our worst partner. We need mental peace . We must protect our mind. We must analyse our view of our enemies carefully.

Consider this Mahany Text from the 8th Century:- If somebody beats you with a stick, do you get angry with the stick or the person ? The stick actually causes the pain, but it is foolish to get angry at the stick. To whom do we get angry ? We get angry at the person who is beating us. But behind his action, there is always motivation. Why do they beat you ? They beat you because of their own anger. Their anger is motivating them to beat you with the stick. Should you get angry at their anger ? Because of causes and conditions, their anger has arisen. But anger rises and falls. After a while their anger will pass.

One day our mother who loves us so much comes home completely drunk and beats us up. Do we hold our anger against her ? It is difficult for us to get angry at our mother. Her anger is shortlived through the influence of alchohol. We should generate compassion for her and our enemies. Our enemies are under the influence of anger, and we should have compassion for them.

The path leading to peace and the right partner is through being disciplined and mindful. Phenomena and objects exist in a form but our ego grasping mind exaggerates their faults. The worst partner we can have is a self-cherishing mind with intense ego-grasping qualities. We should look at people for the proper way they exist. Good luck and good night !

Q1 How do we help others if they have anger ?
A1 You should contemplate the pain of anger, mental defilement, and confusion. You see something that does not exist. If you are angry, you cannot sleep properly nor enjoy eating. When you have anger, then even your friends become enemies. When anger arises, you can't enjoy friendship. To eliminate anger - the first step is to think about its effects. You must generate patience. This is so important for your mental peace. Patience is the antidote to anger.

Think a moment, we cannot contemplate on patience, unless we have an enemy. It is through our enemy that we can gain patience. Our enemy is our Guru; our greatest friend ! We should rejoice at our enemies - they teach us how to master patience ! A hundred years ago, a Lama in Tibet was advised that he should get rid of his rude and angry servant. The Lama replied that the servant gave him much to contemplate on to improve his own patience !

Q2 What if we want to stop other people's anger ?
A2 We have to wait until the person is free from anger. Not all the Buddhas and Bodhisattvas can change an angry person. We must wait until the person's anger has subsided before discussing with them respectfully about their short temper. It is very difficult to change someone when they are angry.

Q3 What do you mean about seeing suffering as suffering ?
A3 We should realise that all things have cause and effect and will rise and fall.

Q4 How can we help someone with great attachment ?
A4 Try to explain the real situation to the person.
Is the object of the person's attachment real ? Then, if that is the case, then everyone should feel the same way towards it. If others don't feel the same way, then it should be explained to them that perhaps the object is not so important.

Q5 Can people have too much detachment ?
A5 Yes, for example, with children, too much detachment could mean they have no respect for others or desire to help others. Their parents may have brought their children up without love or care. The children will grow up having no love and compassion towards others. So without some degree of attachment, we cannot respect or feel love and compassion towards others.

Q6 Venerable, one of my friends always says to me "You'll never understand me." How can I answer this person ?
A6 Perhaps this person speaks to you from anger and frustration. You must be patient and wait until their anger or strong emotion has passed and then try and discuss the situation again with them.

Venerable Antonio Satta was ordained near Pisa, Italy 14

comes. When the time goes. - It goes." But you must believe what you feel helps you.

Even if you believe in God or in an Accidental future, - you need balance. How could the Egyptians build pyramids, embalm bodies, and even now have computers. We cannot look down on these things. We have the world of formation - Sankara Dhuka - It exists because it changes. It forms, reforms, breaks down, builds up. We have a world of Beings - All living beings. Some say our body is composed of four elements, which gives us suffering but can also help us. We have the worlds of Space - All material things, the sun, moon, and stars.

Let's go back to "Pubbakata". Followers of this religion believed in past karma. They believed your PAST karma only gives you re-birth. They also believed in God without accident. If you thought you were born with bad karma, were poor, and had a hard or bad life, then you believed that you could do nothing about your condition.

However in Buddhism, we believe in PRESENT karma. We have a past, present, and future. Buddha could not accept only the past as a condition for our future. Buddha said you should believe in your own karma. In Buddhist Philosophy, if the teacher is looking for a student, that is bad. If the student is looking for a teacher, that is good. This doesn't mean that Buddha wasn't compassionate. It's just he didn't want to force his views on others, as Buddhism is difficult to learn. And certainly, if someone tries to push religion on you, you will surely runaway!

The Buddha said that the ones who wanted to be Buddhist monks should be like a tigers. You must be brave, and be able to travel in the night without a torch. You must be able to avoid human beings and live in the forest. This doesn't mean you have to have a black or blank mind.

Monks must have the determination of a tiger. If you want to meditate for 6 hours to contemplate and gain wisdom, you must be strong like a tiger - preferable a Bengal or Thai tiger!

When some of you here created the Unibuds organisation, you must have been like an echidna or porcupine. When porcupines in winter need warmth, they lean against each other. But the spikes hurt each other, and they feel pain, but they want warmth even more. So even warmth gets pain! When you help each other with your study you have pain. But it is still good for you!

I like to compare Buddhist people in a positive way with butterflies. Butterflies mean everything nice and people love butterflies in my home country Thailand. Caterpillars are considered ugly in Thailand. You will have seen them yourself here! We like butterflies, because they are so beautiful. - When you practise Buddhism, you can change from a caterpillar and fly away as a butterfly! And when you die, you will still decorate the world like butterflies.

Sometimes we can compare ourselves like a terribly hot volcano, with snow outside. You need to be very calm on the outside even if a volcano or fire exists on the inside ! You see the mountain very far away, and it looks so beautiful, yet on the inside it may be boiling. We need to be like the mountain.

If you want to learn Buddhism, you just have to try. Just like you learn how to cook. Then you must try your own cooking. If you have learned well, then you will cook well. Don't forget you have to eat what you cook! Just like in Buddhism, you have to work hard to practise, and perhaps then you can gain a good understanding.

People worry about the Greenhouse Effect, Greenpeace, and the Japanese killing whales. We have everything, diseases, and pollution. Maybe the world will end soon. But if we understand the dhamma, we can accept the changes and realise our karma will look after us. This does not mean we should pollute the world, or not worry if we fail our exams. It does not mean we should be lazy and excuse ourselves by saying we believe in Buddhism. We should understand dhamma and always try to do the right thing.

Some people complain all the time - they say that they help their friends so much but no-one helps them. They tell me this one is bad, and that one is bad. I don't know who is right or who is wrong. But we should try not to complain or gossip about others. We must have loving kindness towards others, and towards everyone.

We must have faith in the Buddha and Jesus Christ. Buddha emphasised that you should practise - and not worship people or statues. If you practise by yourself I'm happy. But I'm not happy if you say "Buddha you are a very smart and a Great One!"

Q1 : Phra Senah is it wrong to take genes out of one animal and put them in another ?
A1 : This question is hard to answer. Are you killing any living beings ? You must have wisdom. We are not supposed to destroy the world. You have to think carefully about what results it might bring. When we go to the bathroom and turn on the hot or cold water, even then we produce different effects. If you make some products or you kill others, and you just want to sell these things for your own benefit, then this is no good for any of us. Otherwise its effects will be like CFCs to the Ozone layer!

Phra Senah ordained in Thailand 10 years ago and while in Sydney, is based at the Wat Buddharangsee Temple at 88 Stanmore Rd. Stanmore.

action, we can understand the Buddha's compassionate spirit.

In India at that time, most people tended to practise for their own salvation. For this reason, the Buddha emphasised the Four Noble Truths and Dependent Origination rather than teaching the way of the Bodhisattva. It would have been of no interest, or use to them. Also he taught how the Five Aggregates of self-awareness produced attachment and suffering, and to avoid these attachments.

Different Buddha-Dhamma practitioners have different interests and standards. Some people think about Buddhism only for themselves and for their next life. They observe the Five Precepts and practise dana. Other people practise the Four Noble Truths. They stay away from many of life's activities and observe the mundane life very well. They think this world is full of dhukka, and for this reason, wish to stay away from the next life.

Mahayana Buddhism accentuates Bodhicitta and helping other people. These people practise Buddhism not for themselves, but for others, and they think money is very good.

If we have nothing is that good for us? Is it good for our practice ? If we are poor, how can we practise Bodhicitta ? If you have no money how can you go to Darling Harbour and see fireworks with your friends ? To those that practise for self-salvation, money is a like a poisonous snake. Those that like Bodhicitta, like money. They like money in their bank account! The money is actually neither good nor bad, but their money is for the benefit of everyone.

An Arahant has nothing, while the Bodhisattva has many things. If the Bodhisattva asks an Arahant for help, the Arahant cannot give anything. Look at this teacup in front of me. - An Arahant would use it and leave it here, whereas a Bodhisattva might have, bring and give many teacups for everyone.

Then there is another type of people who think it is better to be happy with others. When he or she sees friends who are suffering, they feel suffering. These people show great concern for the people around them. - This is the way of the Bodhisattva !

The first group's outlook will be to adhere to the Five Precepts, practise the Ten Wholesome Actions, dana and meditation. The second group may practise the Four Noble Truths and Dependent Origination. The 3rd group will practise the Six Perfections; giving, living by the Five Precepts, accepting natural sufferings, making the right effort, meditating, and practising wisdom.

We cannot say that the people who take the Five Precepts and Ten Wholesome Actions are not practising Buddhism. We all have different interests and different spiritual understandings.

Theravada Buddhism emphasises self-salvation. These people think everything in this world is troublesome. They think it is best to have nothing; no possessions, and no attachments.

Virtues towards becoming a Bodhisattva - Bodhicitta
What is Bodhicitta - a mind and a wish! - It is a wish to become enlightened like the Buddha, while at the same time wishing to help all other living beings. It is the highest ambition. To develop your Bodhicitta you need to cultivate your ambition, compassion, confidence, faith and wisdom.

Compassion

If you want to become a great teacher, you must associate with students. If you want to become a Buddha, you must associate with sentient beings. They need compassion. If you have no compassion or loving, you won't value sentient beings. Only if you love beings can you help them.

If the Bodhisattvas see you in pain, they want to help you and take away your pain and replace it with happiness. How can you develop your compassion? Give dana. Do you think that it is easy? It is not easy at all. Many people think that if they give something extra, that they are giving. The poor cannot live on "extras". But money is only part of what you can give. For you students, you don't have much money. but you do have knowledge. Your English is better than mine. Why is my English so poor that I need my good friend Lim Yang to translate for me ? When you use everything you have, your time, enthusiasm, encouragement, knowledge, money, then this is giving dana.

Many people think that the Unibuds President, Eric, is very busy. Many people abuse him. But how many people offer to do the job? The Bodhisattva will do the job. Give your time, and your mindpower.

Even if you are poor and not intelligent, you can still give dana by showing your concern and care for others. Do any of you have 24 hours of happiness? Therefore if you don't have money or education, whenever you see someone sad, alone, nervous, or with a long face, you can give encouragement and support. Give them confidence and your smile. The main point is that you should be concerned about the welfare of others. If you see any students who don't like study, you should try to encourage them.

Many parents do not know how to teach their children and nag and say how everything they do is wrong. Why do you have a boyfriend so early? Why do you talk on the phone so long? Why do you go out on Friday nights to attend the Dhamma talk?

They always nag whether they are right or wrong. Children don't like their parents when they nag too much. For the children who can control themselves, that is OK, but other children get worse with more nagging and pressure. All children like to improve themselves and be good. But a mother's nagging brings suffering to everyone. The Bodhisattva mothers prefer to encourage their children.

Helping others by giving loving speech is also the way of the Bodhisattva. My friend Venerable Yi-Ran is very good at this, and is particularly patient with me when I am in a bad mood! Can you do this when others are angry at you?

No-one has no self respect. Self-respect may be depressed, or hidden. Only through loving speech can self-respect come back and flower. Giving dana, loving speech, and working together are the techniques of the Bodhisattva. However these techniques are only useful when applied to the right person. If the person cannot appreciate your actions, then these techniques have no use, and you should not apply them.

Confidence and faith

The next virtue needed to become a Bodhisattva, is confidence and faith. We must learn from the Buddha. We should always make a good wish to benefit everyone. This is how we can be of value to society. You need to be confident in the Buddha's teachings, and the merits of the Triple Gem. People without confidence cannot be good Buddhists, and these people will not gain fruits in practising in the Way of the Bodhisattva. Confidence should be our main aim.

How can we gain confidence? We can read the autobiography of the Buddha and the Sutras and the biographies of leading monks. Bodhicitta without support or confidence will retreat very soon. Therefore the way to improve our confidence is to read the accounts of past sages and learn from them. To be successful, you must have strong confidence. When Galileo put forward the idea that the earth rotated around the sun, this conflicted with the beliefs of the time. He was ridiculed, but kept his belief until he died.

Wisdom

Let us talk about wisdom. What is wisdom and what is knowledge? Knowledge has limitations, but wisdom (sila panya) has no limit. Common knowledge is only knowledge. Wisdom relies on our own self-realisation. One aspect of wisdom is to realize impermanence. The world is continuously changing, and these changes take place because of causes and secondary causes. Can anyone here say that this is not true ? The world is also full of suffering and dissatisfaction. Is this also not true?

The Buddha told us about his enlightenment. He also encouraged each and everyone of you not to blindly accept his theories but to prove it for yourselves. - Just like doing your maths homework! Recognising impermanence and the benefits of non ego-attachment are all answers "in the back of the book", but will remain a mystery to you until you calculate it for yourself!

When we give dana, we should not be attached to the giving itself, nor take too much pride, nor brag about our giving. Having wisdom will not give us too much conceit. Only through cultivating wisdom can we cut off our mental defilements. I hope you all can practise the Perfections of loving speech, working together, helping others, and giving dana.

Q1. What happens if a Bodhicitta dies poor?
A1. It is not possible for a Bodhicitta to die poor. They have invested in this life. The more you give, the richer you will be. By rich I mean you will be rich in spirit, confidence, emotion, friends, knowledge, and experience, as well as materially. How can you not be rich? Those that give a lot must be rich! Those that are in constant need of others are the poorest. A real Bodhisattva does not think about what he will get at the end of the day, but gives help with wisdom to those that need it.

Q2. Why do you emphasise money and money making in Buddhism? A2. We do not look down on money. We do not attach ourselves to it. This is the spirit of the Bodhisattva. Some people have the wrong understanding and think Buddhists should be totally non-attached and poor. This is not what the Buddha taught. If you think money cannot help others, how is that we can build schools and hospitals within society? How can society improve without paying for teachers, doctors, and temples?
Buddhists do not see making money as the end purpose, but rather as the means to help all in society. This is why I have given such examples this evening. I hope that you understand that Bodhisattvas are not limited to only giving away money. Look at the lives of older people. The older generation who have accumulated sufficient wealth do not want more money. They feel alone and only need your care, comfort and loving speech.

So we survive, yet we are dying every moment. From the moment of conception, in our mother's womb, we have to grow. In order to grow, we have to give up and get rid of old things, and take on new things. [For example: At first we drink breast milk, but then that is not enough for us, and we are given soft mashed food. We eat that and grow a little bigger, but when our teeth grow, we are given hard food; raw fruit and vegetables. So just to grow, we must keep changing, giving up our old ways and diet, and begin new ways and a new diet. At first we also cling to our mother, but then we become too big for her to carry us. Then we have to let her go and begin crawling, and walking for ourselves!]

Every moment, we are being reborn. When we look at a candle-flame, it may burn for an hour or two, but each flame is not the same. Each flame consumes a different part of the candle. Every moment we are dying and being reborn, but we do not detect our rebirth.

In the Buddhist scriptures, it mentions that we are travelling in a cycle without stopping. We sit here for 1 or 2 hours, yet we do not detect that we are moving. We do not detect that the world is rotating and orbiting around the sun. That our sun is also moving through space. How can we stay in one place for more than a moment ?

We are moving and we are changing also, but we do not detect it. This change affects every part of our mind and body. This change also affects the hardest rocks. Even though a rock has existed for millions of years, it is still changing and renewing itself.

Not knowing or recognising change is delusion. On account of this delusion, we experience things as desirable or undesirable. Our eyes focus on visible objects, our ears focus on tangible sounds, our tongue focuses on tastes, our body focuses on touch. Depending on our focus on visible things, if we see a pleasant sight - we are pleased. If it is unpleasant, then we feel upset in our minds. We always like or dislike things to happen. We do not recognise things as they are.

When you open your eyes, you see the cup on the table beside me here now. We all recognise it as a cup. But the original cup has already changed. Its image still remains in your mind. But the conceptual image is not the real one.

When we have desire, we want to be close to something. If we dislike something, we want to move away. Like and dislike creates a push/pull affect in our mind. This liking and disliking creates craving to be near or far away from people/things. The craving creates attachment, but this craving comes about through not understanding things as they are.

Object contact feeds our feelings and our craving. Since we were young children, we have been conditioned to associate different objects with different emotions. Now when we are older, we still allow ourselves to form these emotional images of things we desire, and we forget to try to experience only the present situation.

As we get older, we should try to cultivate seeing things as they are,- without the emotional images and attachments from the past. We should see only the visble cup. We should not allow ourselves to process thoughts of like or dislike in our mind. If we cultivate the habit of living in the immediate present, we will not see things as very beautiful or very ugly. Instead, we will see things as they are, and our mind will not be agitated, but relaxed and calm.

We should try not to let emotional images form of objects we see, then we can live without attachment. Actually, in reality, this is very difficult to practise. But this is mindful practice. If we practise like this we will be able to exclude craving and clinging. But unfortunately most people think that peace is only temporary, and permanent peace is regarded as beyond this world. Greed, ignorance, and delusion govern this world, and continue to get us into trouble.

If a person gets good instruction and tries to develop themselves to seeing things as they really are, then they will find great peace and happiness. Unfortunately, we are all so accustomed to living with forms and images and living in the past and not the present. When we develop mindfulness, then deeper understanding happens. That deeper understanding helps us to change. We may go through several stages of understanding things, but after a while we will lose our fear.

As long as we have craving and attachment, we will always have fear. We worry about our life, we worry about our death. When we develop wisdom, we have no craving, nor clinging, nor hatred, nor anger, nor greed.

Why then do we lose those emotions ? - Because our understanding becomes profound. Everything is changing and does not remain in this world. There is nothing that is free from change. When our craving and attachment is gone, we are free. We have no worries or fears, only peaceful serenity with us. Nobody can provoke us to get angry. Then our personality changes. It is a long walk, but if you try, perhaps you also can follow the path that the Buddha discovered for us. I hope so.

We can reflect on this and think about how it applies to our family situation. Our actions at home affect all the family, and we should try to behave with consideration. Our actions with with our family, friends, or teachers may produce good or bad results. The doing is the cause or in Pali, karma. This cause can become the effect or the chance of the future.

Sometimes we need to reflect more to think and understand how our actions have led us to our present condition. If we think more carefully about what results our actions will bring to our family, friends and teachers, then it will help us to behave more wisely. This will be the effect from understanding the cause. Then we will not blindly accept superstitious advice about our situations being the result of nihilistic or existential chance or fate!

We monks devote our whole lives learning the teachings of the Buddha. We try to create the causes now to understand and cultivate a future mind free from greed, hatred, and delusion. If we devote our time creating and developing our spiritual path, it will help us let go our attachments and our bad luck!

We live only about 80 years, and yet really, our lives are so short when we compare this to the age of the earth! So now is a good opportunity to think about the value of your lives. We should practise giving to others, and create good causes for good future effects now! We should share this knowledge with all beings. We can look at the Buddha's example. Did he get paid wages? He didn't ask for rewards from us. Yet his life was full of blessings and prosperity just through setting a good example!

Q1 What is the difference between chance & fate?
A1 I think chance can be considered as having an opportunity to do different things. Fate may be considered to be the sickness and death that all beings must experience.

Q2 How much opportunity and choice do we have for improving our past karma?
A2 We can observe, practise, and see the results of our past actions. We can see the bad things for ourselves. By reflecting on the results of our past actions, when opportunities arise, we have a choice to improve our future situation by behaving wisely rather than selfishly.

Let me tell you a story. Mogalina was Buddha's right hand disciple. He was known for his psychic powers in meditation. Many lives previously, he had tried to get rid of his mother because she was old, sick, and useless. He took her to the forest. He tried to pretend that a robber had come to get her and kill her. From that action, Mogalina himself observed that in the next life, he was born in the hell. But many lives later he had a chance to meet the Buddha and become an Arahant. However, another sect tried to kill him because he was famous for his psychic powers. Eventually, they killed him, which was the result of his past bad karma. Mogalina tried not to let them create more bad karma for themselves, but he couldn't.

Q3 Does our fate differ if we are Christians ?
A3 We teach cause and effect in Buddhism. In Christianity, they use the god to punish us. We Buddhists can still contemplete on this to keep us alert and moral. It is a different teaching to Buddhism, but its aim is for same result - that people should behave respectfully to one another. All religions try to teach the same things - to try to avoid doing evil. But Buddhism goes beyond that. By understanding the Four Noble Truths; - (1 Suffering is universal, 2 The cause of suffering is craving, 3 The cure for suffering is the elimination of craving, 4 The way to achieve the elimination of suffering is to follow the Middle Path, which is described in the Noble Eightfold Path. ie:- 1 Right understanding, 2 Right thought, 3 Right speech, 4 Right action, 5 Right livelihood, 6 Right effort, 7 Right mindfulness, 8 Right concentration.), it will help us relinquish our mental defilements of greed and anger.

Q4 Is this Dhamma talk by chance or by fate?
A4 It is a good opportunity, for us all to reflect how we can improve ourselves and practise more positively.

Q5 Buddhism explains events are a result of karma. How does Buddhism explain the miraculous healings that have occurred to believers in the Christian faith?
A5 When we meet someone holy or someone for whom we have great respect, we may find great inspiration through their loving kindness and purity. A sick person may absorb this energy and this may help them to practice better. Practising this goodness will help the process of their healing.

Q6 Can we run away from our fate?
A6 We cannot physically avoid problems, but mentally we can, just like Mogalina.

Q7 What about using biotechnology, DNA and gene manipulation to alter our karma?
A7 The new baby or beings will still need to mentally cultivate and develop good habits, regardless of their physical perfection!

Q8 If a baby avoids an hereditary disease through genetic manipulation, does this mean it has good karma?
A8 Each of us determine our own karma. The baby's state of mind and attitudes will still determine its later conditions and life.

we think thoughts of hate and anger. This does not help us cure our illness!

We often think,"Why am I getting a cold while others are not getting sick at all?" We develop a cold on account of our unwise living. Others do not develop such troubles. They don't seem to make any mistakes or get very sick. If we think, when we develop the first winter flu,"Oh my body is just making some repair work to adapt to the colder weather. Therefore I should be grateful", it will help us avoid a prolonged sickness. We should love the climate, and respect that the rain and cold helps us in many good ways.

But our bodily physical troubles can never be as bad as our mental troubles. Our unwise actions and eating habits may cause us greater bodily complications and illnesses. The disease we develop is actually giving a warning to us. We should cease our bad practices, and modify our behaviour. The moment our mind is free from disturbance, our bodily feeling will follow.

Pain is physical and real. During painful episodes, we should try and keep our mind steady, and regulate and train our attitude. We should think simply,"Yes I am getting this pain because of my self-abuse and bad practises." Your trouble will become less when your attitude towards your ailment is friendly. You will retain your illness, but you may profit from it also. So when you get some physical pain, you should take advantage of it.

Some people meditate on the unpleasant feeling and pain. Suppose you have headache and feel very disturbed. It is a good opportunity to mindfully meditate on a painful feeling. When we meditate, we still feel pain, but we have no trouble. Why don't we get trouble? - On account of the "self" idea. This is what creates a lot of the problems. Selfishness, - the more selfishness there is, the more trouble. When you are getting a headache you say,"My headache." You develop more trouble. But other people do not feel your headache, and do not feel your trouble. Therefore, if you say,"Not my headache", you will not develop further troubles!

If you have attachments, you have troubles. Our mind is also our body. When we try to pinpoint "I" we cannot find it. There is no "I". The joint functioning of the mental and physical is considered as "I", but on account of this "I" idea, we create attachments for ourselves.

We want something, and after we have it, then we want something more. See now we are sitting here. You have something in your possesion. Perhaps your clothes or your shoes become unusable. Perhaps someone comes to cut or burn your clothes and you get upset. They cut and burn your shoes and throw them out of the house. Yet if we see the same shoes by the side of a road being cut up and burnt, we say,"Not my shoes - not my trouble!"

If you can develop up to the point of non-self, with no "I", "not mine", then you can look at yourself with true detachment. If you can do this, then you have no attachments, and you have no suffering! But this is difficult to practise. It's very easy to speak and talk about. We should try and train ourselves to look at things with the selflessness idea.

We should try to understand why our ailments have come. There is something wrong with our living habits. This ailment has come to warn me as a friend that there is something wrong with my practice. If the strength of your hatred and anger towards your illness is less, you will develop less trouble. You should try to understand things better. This will enable you to heal yourself much faster!

Our body is made up of our mind and our previous actions. When your mind is free from trouble and is wholesome, your mind will generate healthy elements in your body. For example, how did you come here tonight? - By car or walking? Without mind and desire you could not walk, you could not drive the car. - You would not be here!

Why do passive smokers seem to develop more trouble in these modern times? The smoker loves smoking! Even though he inhales poisons, he enjoys smoking. He is very happy! His body system rejects the unfriendly substances of the smoking poisons and his body stays well. - But the passive smoker hates the smoke, and hates the smell. The passive smoker feels the smoke in his lung. He feels hatred and anger and feels bad. This creates a mental poison which creates internal poison. This mental poison affects the blood and combines with the poison in the lungs.

Similarly for people who may hate the climate. A person who is mean and selfish often finds trouble. If we are not selfish, then we find we have no trouble! Some diseases and illnesses we should look on as a warning or friend. We should train ourselves to think of our illnesses in this way. This will reduce the troubles of our sicknesses considerably!

But do not accept this advice blindly! Verify it for youself. Whenever you catch a cold or have some trouble, try these ideas, and refine them to your own situation.

Q1 Venerable, you have not mentioned any karmic effects contributing to our illness?
A1 You are right, but this would take more time to explain. We might have done something wrong. Depending on our karma we may have a different result. But we can change bad karma through mindfulness. This does not depend on whether we are mediocre or of great intelligence. It depends on whether we have right understanding to practice for the benefit of all.

or theories because it dislikes any uncertainty. A meditation practice only pursues clearness, and when that is understood, one can accept everything. Then one's whole life enters a state of clearness and certainty.

The next thing that Zen dislikes is discrimination, caused by thinking, calculating, and analyzing. Let's say that you have just eaten a delicious, sweet mango. If someone who had not tasted it asked you how it tasted, would you be able to describe the exact taste of that mango to him? Rather than using descriptions, it would be best to have a piece of the mango to find out.

The original meditation practice sets itself apart from analyzing consciousness and awareness. So how can we in reality, where theory and analysis make up the foundation of society in which we live, practice meditation which excludes theory and analysis?

Another very important thing is to examine closely how this exclusion can affect our lives. What we fear the most is the fact that everything that happens on this earth is actually good, true, and philosophical, existing harmoniously together. But we see and understand this with darkened minds, thus causing suffering that makes us regard the true state of the world as something we should deny, and distance ourselves from.

When we think about it carefully, strictly, all things on earth came into existence naturally, through cause and effect, and including every one of us. But even whilst living in this harmony, we struggle against it, trying to free ourselves from it,- and conflicts arise.

The aim of meditation, the essence of the dhamma, is to create and rediscover our values. Instead of throwing something away because we think it is bad, we should remodel it, cultivate it, make it more valuable to use to our advantage.

To do that, we need to acquire wisdom by changing our attitude's towards our understanding and knowledge of different things. I think meditation is the best way to build up this wisdom. Methods of practice differ according to different sects and nationalities. After 30 years of experience with "Kong-An" meditation, I feel that it offers the clearest and the purest essence in meditation.

This form of Samatha Meditation reached its peak 1,100 years ago, at the time of the great Zen Master VoVu during the Chinese Tang Dynasty period. He was the best of all masters who created Kong-Ans, and I will introduce one of his Kong-Ans now...

One day, when a monk came to visit VoVu, VoVu asked him if he had visited there before. When the visitor said no, VoVu told him to,"Just have some tea!" Then, some days later, another monk came visiting, and VoVu asked if he had been there before. When the visitor said yes, VoVu told him to,"Just have some tea".

VoVu's attendant who had looked on in both occasions, asked VoVu why he told both monks to have some tea when one said yes and the other no? VoVu then called the attendant and when the attendant answered the call, VoVu told him to,"Just have some tea".

So a Kong-An named VoVu Vikdara was created. Now, if one does not fully understand what this "Just have some tea" is, then this becomes a Kong-An. What did VoVu mean by "Just have some tea?"?

The idea is to concentrate and question this puzzling speech (Kong-An) day and night. This is the basic method of Kong-An meditation. The most important point here is that one should question without the desire to find out the answer. One must just question. This is easier said than done, but this method is the Kong-An meditation's first and last most important point.

When you keep practicing in this way, many thoughts surrounding you will disappear and you are left with one single question. When that time comes, the practice becomes easy and enjoyable, but it is also a dangerous time. For as one's understanding becomes deeper, at times one may come in contact with the sensations of awakening, and think that one has fully understood VoVu's Kong-An.

When that happens you must seek a wise teacher to have your progress and understanding examined, and as well to keep you on the right path. When this is done consistently, you will progress rapidly, your business and work will not fail, your health will improve and life will be happy and interesting. The time will come when you will be able to truly concentrate and meet your true timeless self, and be thankful and satisfied.You will not only be paying respects to the three gems, but to everything around you. You will lead a rich and contented life.

Lastly I would like to say something that I have felt throughout the years of my practice before we finish the evening with a sitting. This is that the more one fills, the bigger the space grows to be filled. The more one empties the smaller the space becomes to be emptied.

Thank you for your attention.

Q1. What should a Westerner contemplate for meditation?

A1. They can meditate on Kong-Ans also.

Q2. Is there only one answer to the Kong-Ans?
A2. Yes the teacher's answer must be matched.

Q3. Can you tell us the answer to the Kong-Ans?
A3. Actually, in our tradition, this is not the place to be asking questions. The whole point of the Kong-Ans is to use your own mind to find the answer. Asking questions is like a child requesting that the parents walk for it. The child would never learn to walk. In China in the olden days, students were beaten if they answered incorrectly. If they dared to ask further qualifying questions, then they were considered disrespectful and immature, as well as ignorant!

Q4. Is this the way meditation is taught in Korea?
A4. Yes, meditation is learnt this way, using the Kong-Ans.

Q5. Can you give us another example of a Kong An ?
A5. Yes, firstly "Who is the master of this body?". Another one is,"Does the dog have Buddha nature ?" The answer to the second Kong-An is given as neither yes nor no.
There are 1700 Kong-Ans. One correct answer will be correct for the 1700 questions. A wrong answer means that the 1700 puzzling questions would need 1700 individual answers!

Q6. Who examines the answer?
A6. There is a way of checking through the answers of the old Zen Masters.
The clearness and understanding must last several years.

Q7. At what stage is Chinese meditation at?
A7. The Chinese now concentrate on Amitahbba Meditation.

But 1100 years ago, the Chinese practiced Kong-An meditation.

never to deteriorate or change, like a new CD player or car. But after a while, they become scratched, rusty or broken. These things effect our mind all the time, and we feel very disturbed.

So if the mind does not understand that everything must change, and is impermanent, then, when we try to attach and cling to things our mind will have suffering.

So how can we understand the Buddha's teaching so that we can reduce our suffering? The way to overcome these problems is to follow the precepts (rules). The first precept tells us not to hurt others or ourself. We can use the analogy of a building. Following the precepts we will be able to build a tall solid building. For example, we monks have 227 rules, novice monks 10 precepts, nuns 8 precepts, and lay-people 5 precepts.We monks still have 227 rules to follow even though we are mortal!

Secondly, we should not steal. Stealing creates disharmony. and trouble for everyone. Thirdly, we should avoid sexual misconduct. We should not try to have more than one girlfriend or boyfriend, wife or husband. This will create many problems for us. Fourthly we should not lie. This fourth precept is very important. We can have great happiness and security when we know people are honest with us. When people lie it creates much ill will. Fifthly, avoid also drinking alcholol, or taking drugs.

To be a good person we must look after our precepts. If we don't have mindfulness and concentration, the body may be healthy but the mind will be running who knows where ...?

If we lose our mind, we find anger and lose our way.

Even if we have concentration, we may still have suffering. This is because we don't see clearly or understand the cause of suffering. Do you ever wonder where your suffering comes from?

It comes from ignorance and lack of wisdom. Everything must change. We must learn how to be free and practice with patience. Otherwise we will not be successful.

Wisdom is much more important than knowledge in this life.

We have this body, we have this mind. We cannot control the body, it will pass, change, and die. But we can control our mind. We can let go these sufferings...

The Buddha did not say to let go your husband or wife, jobs, or family or community responsibilities. But we should let go confusion and things that trouble us. We should develop our loving kindness. We can't expect anyone to understand us fully, as we are all different. Therefore we should take the first step and forgive others and have loving kindness and compassion for all around us.

We should try to set the example.

The Buddha said that the past is the past.- It is gone already. The future is too far away. We don't know what will come, therefore we must live in the present.

We need to keep up our practice. If we don't remind ourself and continue to understand what is suffering, our mind will be like water falling down. It will go everywhere.

I hope this talk encourages you. Please feel welcome to come and visit us at Sunnyataram Forest Monastery in Bundanoon. The bush and animals are very peaceful there. It may help you with your practice!

May you all be well and happy.

Q1. Venerable you emphasise the present life. What about the future?
A1. Our future is based on our current and past actions.

Q2. How can we measure our current practice progress against the future?
A2. We have the collection of present events to measure our future. If we are experiencing satisfaction now, then this must be partly attributable to our current actions as well as our past karma. If we are doing good deeds now, then we may find we will reap some benefit from these in the future, just as our bad actions in the past and present may cause us some anguish in the future also!

If you compare ourselves with animals, they have much more patience. Human beings are very weak. I asked a doctor once, how long we humans have complained about back-pain. He said humans have had backpain for as long as they have been standing upright !

For example, the earthworm is very patient. It doesn't complain if the soil is too wet or too dry ! It just continues making holes and helping bring air to the soil.

Some scholarly monks class patience into four categories;
- Patience for natural movement.
- Patience for mental suffering.
- Patience for physical suffering.
- Patience for human action.

The first type of patience is exemplified by your feelings for hot or cold weather. We need patience for natural changes. If we want our hair to grow long, we must wait for it to grow. Sometimes we will be wet and sometimes we will be dry. We must wait for the weather to change before we can collect water, or perhaps before we can have a picnic. We must be patient with the elements and accept the weather conditions.

We need patience for mental activity. Sometimes we feel so sad in our minds. We feel so alone, everything goes wrong and we feel depressed. Yet when we open our eyes at other times, our mind is happier and we can see that everywhere on this planet there is great beauty, even under the sea.

The object of learning Buddhism is to overcome yourself. It is to realise that our mind will fluctuate through the different emotions of happiness and sadness, enthusiasm and disappointment, anger and calm, excitement and boredom.

Some people say that they think they are being very patient if they want to go to the pub but don't go. You need restraint and tolerance. Sometimes you think you are very patient because you stay in the pub all night ! But this is not self control.

We also need patience for physical suffering.

When you go to the hospital, you have to have a lot of patience ! I have been here 9 years and recently I was very sick with the flu. I went to the doctor but he could not help me. He said "Just stay in bed and keep warm. Be patient and the flu will pass !"

When I was in the country as a young boy, I used to climb trees. I fell down many times but never hurt myself. But my friend next door fell out of the tree one day, hurting himself very badly. He had to stay many months in hospital. He had to be patient enough to allow his bones to knit together again.

As students you have to study very hard. You will then have to earn money for your family. Afterwards, you may have to carry many heavy loads and greater responsibilities. Then you may even become your own boss. You will be even more important and have an even greater load and responsibility.

But having patience will bring you strength. Patience will bring you happiness. Patience will bring you beauty.

In Asia, the people can be very patient. In Thailand especially, the women sit in the "Angel" position and do not move. They are very patient and can sit still in this position for a long time. It used to be very important for Thai ladies to be able to clasp their hands together for long periods. The Westerner could not understand why the Thai women behaved in this manner. But the Westerner could see that the Thai women were very refined (disciplined) and had great patience.

If we don't learn to practise in this way, how can we succeed ? If you have a calm body, if you have a calm mind, you will have beauty, strength, and happiness.

You can wear necklaces and adornments over your body, but your movements and your actions are far more visible and apparent to everyone. You can't hide how your mind is behaving. Patience is very beautiful. Patience does bring strength.

The ears of the fox in Europe are short whereas the ears of the fox in Africa are long. Why is this ? The ears of the fox in Africa are longer to let the heat out. The fox had patience and adapted to its different environment.

When winter time comes, the trees must have patience, and animals must have patience and hibernate. They don't eat, they just stay still. For sure they must get cold, but they still survive. They learn from nature to be patient.

Sometimes you put chemicals on ants, and initially they die. But they have patience. After a few years they are patient enough to adapt to the poison and then it doesn't hurt them any more.

Our own body can also adapt. When I was in Darwin recently, I saw aboriginals talking together in the sun. It was very hot then, over 35 or 40 degrees. I couldn't believe that they could stand out in the sun for several hours and talk together. They did not show any awareness of the sun or its great heat.

Supposedly I come from a hot country, Thailand, but it was far too hot for me. The aboriginals have had the patience to adapt to the sun and now have a pigment in their skin to survive in that environment.

When you do a marathon, you have to run 42 km, or perhaps you are a good swimming athlete and like to swim in 1500 metre races. You have to have patience to train. They say there is no gain without pain. Each year those athletes at the Barcelona Olympics have been building up their patience, and training harder and harder. They have the patience to succeed, the patience that brings them strength, the patience that brings them happiness and satisfaction that they are performing well.

You come here to learn Buddhism, and to find happiness. It is difficult but you have to have patience to make small gains, and build on those gains. Some people like to run and cannot wait. Sometimes you have to be patient. If we want to grow a big tree, we have to wait. It will not grow for us in 10 minutes ! If we want to improve ourselves we should realise we can not do it in 10 minutes either. Sometimes you can not get an immediate result from your actions and you have to wait.

Sometimes when you wait, you think there is something wrong. Think of the hermit crab. It is like a shrimp, but it takes over a vacant shell, and then carries the shell as its own house to protect itself. If they didn't have a shell, they would be eaten by all the other sea creatures and birds. The hermit crab can go everywhere, can feed, but it must carry its shell, - its house, on its back. And then it survives !

We should carry our patience around like the hermit crab carries its shell. Our patience will also protect us and help us survive ! Please understand that the hermit crab does not live like a parasite, it lives like an orchid.

Consider turtles. They are very slow, patient, creatures, yet I heard some one say they have very long lives, up to 150 years !

Coconuts are abundant in the Pacific region. When the coconut drops into the sea, the saltwater can not get in. The coconut can float for a 1,000 miles, find land and then grow itself into a tree. Coconuts grow and travel around the Pacific by themselves. The coconut is very patient and can exist and remain intact without succumbing to rot for many years.

And do you remember that Australian man who survived in the Nepal snow recently for 43 days ? What patience he had !

You can also eradicate your anger through patience.

Sometimes when you wait for someone, you can lose your patience. Let me tell you a story: In Japan, there were two very powerful, though evenly matched wrestlers. They decided one day that they would have a competition to see who actually was the best. So they set the time for the match the following day at 2 o'clock. One wrestler came promptly at 2 o'clock. The other wrestler decided purposely to come 2 hours late, at 4 o'clock.

So who won the fight ? - The wrestler that had waited from 2 o'clock was so impatient and upset for waiting, that he could not concentrate properly and lost the fight !

- In Chinese Kung Fu films, they always emphasise how patient the characters are !

We have all disappointed ourselves through being impatient at some time. There are many times in our life when we have to do, to go, to act. Patience is not always staying still, not hurrying, not rushing. Everything has to be ready on time, and patience is the discipline and training to be able to achieve that objective.

We can train animals, dogs and monkeys. I heard monkeys are hard to train apparently because they are more intelligent. The monkey is naughty and tricky, and knows what it is supposed to do, but prefers not to. Dogs have more patience, and accept training much more easily. How can we have more patience like the dog and gain more wisdom ? I never saw the crocodiles run in the Northern Territory, but I heard that they never eat turtles which are much slower than them. Why is this ?

If we use our wisdom, we can decide when we should use waiting or acting patience. I love patience. I love wisdom second. You can train yourself to become more patient. Look at the earthworm. it has no eyes nor fur. Yet it must be patient and gather its food searching through the soil.

Practise patience and you will achieve your goals. In Barcelona, you must be fast, strong, and tough, or skilled as in soccer. But in gymnastics, they give you points according to your poise, steadiness, and patience. The athletes have had to be very patient to go to the Olympics, - all the years that they have been training and the effort they have been putting towards achieving this ambition. It didn't take them 10 minutes to get there.

There is so much to tell about patience and its application in this world. I wish I could put patience in a bottle and offer it to you all this evening ! Thank you all for having good patience to listen to me.

Wat Buddharangsee

Wat Buddharangsee was established to provide a place of learning and worship for people interested in Buddhism.
It was formed with the support of many people within the Australian, Burmese, Sri Lankan, Thai, Malaysian, and Singaporean communities, as well as many generous Members of the Mahamakut Foundation from Bangkok.
Wat Buddharangsee was opened on Vesak Day, 25th of May 1975, by His Royal Highness, Crown Prince Vajiralongkorn, in the presence of His Highness, The Most Venerable Somdet Sangharaja Phra Nyanasamvara, Supreme Patriach of Thailand.
The Wat celebrates many colourful events in the Buddhist calendar, including a monthly fair. Resident monks conduct regular dhamma talks and meditation sessions in both Thai and English, and the monastery provides both a focus and support for for many in the migrant community.

EDITORIAL NOTES

WE have in the first place a few notes to offer on the translation, in these pages, of the fanous schema of the twelve Nidaýnas, or causal bases.

As to the English renderings here used for the causal formula, it is not pretended that they coincide always with the terms in the original. They have rather been coincide always with the terms in the original. They have rather been chosen as the least misleading. There is some discusstion of them in our translation of the 'Great Suttanta on Causation' (Dialogues of the Buddha ii, No XV), and in our article 'PatÞicca-samuppaýda' (Encyclop dia of Religion and Ethics). Tere may be more discussion in this society's fortheoming translation of the Visuddhi-Magga. Here then we will be brief.

The title 'PatÞicca-samuppaýda,' which is almost certainly a name given by the compilers of the Sutta-PitÞaka, at a later date, to what Gotama is made here to call his 'doctrine by the middle,'

For karma might so well have been used, had it been just the needed word. 'Consciousness' is just mind, the mental continuum. 'Name-and-shape' is the old Vedic convenient term for our dual organism, 'name' being resolved in other Suttas into mental factors.

Introduction by Translator:

This translation into English from Chinese has been done, firstly, after consulting the excelle translation forming part of a dissertation by Robert E. Buswell, Jr., Professor of East Asian L Cultures at the University of California, Los Angeles, under the title: THE FORMATION OF CHINA AND KOREA (ISBN 0-691-07336-8). All inadequacies and mistakes are entirely min

This sutra, although comparatively short, encompasses the essence of many, if not all the s explained by the Buddha himself in the last chapter. It expounds the principle of DHARMAS literally everything. For someone on the spiritual path, it gives a definitive view on what does enlightenment! Although this is a pre-eminent companion text for all followers of Châ€™an Mahamudra, Taoism, and all non-dual spiritual paths, it can also act as a compass for all se seekers.

As this sutra is full of gems, its reading should be done slowly with frequent reflections, if an wants to reap maximum benefit out of it. It should be borne in mind that the wordings within ) represent alternative terms for the word or phrase immediately preceding it. On the other h fact that very often the same Chinese word can have more than one meaning.

Readers who are not familiar with the Buddhaâ€™s spiritual attainments, may be flabberga size of the audience mentioned in the first chapter. However, as one progresses, it should n realize that the Buddha is a Master of Non-duality. The taste of the pudding, however, is to p expounded in this sutra through personal practice and experimentation.

May I thank those friends who helped me in one way or another in the completion of the tran to Martin Ng with the proof-reading and the typing of my personal rendering of the summary Ian Gan for his invaluable constructive suggestions. May all be blissful from moment-to-mo

Prologue

Thus have I heard. The Buddha was once in the great city of Rajagrha (Kingâ€™s House), (Vulture Peak), together with a great assembly of some ten thousand bhiksus (ordained mon attained the [full] arhat path. They included arhats Sariputra, Mahamaudgalyayana, Subuti,

Also present were some two thousand bodhisattvas, mahasattvas (adÂ-epts on their way to Their names were Liberation (Vimukti) Bodhisattva, Mind King (Cittaraja) Bodhisattva, Non-A (Apratisthita) Bodhisattva, etc.

Furthermore, there were eighty thousand elders (grhapati). Their names were Elder Chastity Elder Great Chastity (Mahabrahmacarya), Elder Luminary (Jyotiska), etc.

In addition, there were devas, dragons, yaksas (demons), gandharvas (demigod-musicians) garudas (mystical birds), kinnaras (half horses/half men), mahoragas (great snakes), humar some six hundred million of them.

At that time the Lord was surrounded by the great assembly. He expounded a Mahayana su â€˜The Practice and Benediction of the Single-Taste, Definite, Signless, Beyond-Creation, A Self-Enlightenmentâ€™ (Vajrasamadhi Sutra). If one hears this sutra or retains only one fou it, that person will be able to access the Buddhaâ€™s wisdom [in future]. He will be able to l appropriate expedients, sentient beings [who, in turn, can] become great spiritual mentors to beings.

After the Buddha expounded this sutra, he folded [his legs] into full-lotus pose and entered i absorption (vajrasamadhi), with his body and mind motionless. At that time, a bhiksu (ordain assembly named Agada, rose from his seat [to pay respects to the Buddha]. He joined his p his right knee on the ground. Reiterating the essence [of the sutra expounded], he recited th

The Lord, the embodiment of compassion,
With wisdom penetrating without obstruction,
In order to ferry sentient beings across [to the other shore],
Has explained the essence of the One-Truth.
All this was accomplished via the path of Single-Taste, Never by means of the Hinayana (incomplete realization).
Where the taste of the essence has been spoken,
It enabled all to abandon the unreal.
Accessing the wisdom-base of all the buddhas,
That Absolute Reality,
The entire audience (now) knows how to transcend the world,

With no one unable to attain liberation (ultimately).
All the innumerable bodhisattvas,
Know how to ferry all sentient beings across (to the other shore).
For the assembly, they inquired extensively and profoundly,
On the calm-void characteristics of all dharmas.
They accessed the Absolute domain [of enlightenment].
The Tathagata, through his wisdom and expedients, Speaks so that [all beings] will be able to access Reality,
In accordance with the One-Vehicle,
Without extraneous tastes.
Like the soaking by a single rain,
Multitudes of plants grow verdantly.
According to the differences in their natures,
Being soaked by the Dharma of Single-Taste,
Everyone is completely fulfilled.
Just as being soaked by a single rain,
All their bodhi-sprouts are matured.
Accessing the Diamond-Taste [of the diamond samadhi],
They realized the absorption of the Reality of dharmas.
They are determined to transcend doubts and regrets,
Through the seal of the One-Dharma.

Chapter Two:
The Signless Dharma

Arising from his samadhi, the Lord spoke thus, â€œThe wisdom-base of all the buddhas acc characteristics of all dharmas. From this definitive wisdom-base, the buddhasâ€™ expedien powers in benefiting sentient beings are all done without signs. The essence of the One-Enl difficult to understand and access. It is not understood or recognized by adherents of the tw sravakas and pratyekabuddhas]. It is only known by the buddhas and bodhisattvas who exp to sentient beings capable of transcendence.â€•

Then Vimukti (Liberation) Bodhisattva immediately rose from his seat, with his palms joined right knee on the ground, addressed the Buddha, â€œLord! After the Buddhaâ€™s [physica dharma will vanish from the world and the semblance dharma will linger on. During the dhar sentient beings [tainted by] the five turbidities (such as calamities, wrong views, unending w shortened life-span etc., over infinite world-cycles) will perform all types of evil deeds and tra amongst the three (form, formless and desire) realms of existence without respite. May the B mercy and compassion, proclaim for the later generations, the Single-Taste Absolute Reality enable all sentient beings to be liberated.â€•

The Buddha said, â€œVirtuous man, you asked about what caused my appearance in the w beings to let them attain the fruition (enlightenment) that transcends the world. This great ma buddhaâ€™s appearance in the world] is inconceivable, because it is performed out of grea compassion. If I do not respond [to your questions], I will fall into miserliness [for with-holdin
I have awakened to]. You should listen attentively and carefully. I shall proclaim [the Dharma

â€œVirtuous man, when liberating sentient beings, do not conceive whether it takes place o an act) is great indeed! Guide these sentient beings to abandon mind and ego, for both mind basically void [of independent existence]. If they realize the void of mind, the mind will not ill project anything. Free from all illusory projections, they will attain cessation [of birth-death cy mind that does not project anything derives from such non-projection.â€•

Vimukti Bodhisattva addressed the Buddha, â€œThe nature of the mind of sentient beings is [of an independent nature]. The essence of the mind is void of sense-objects (rupa) and rela characteristics. How are we to cultivate and train so that we may realize the fundamentally v Buddha proclaim this for us, out of his mercy and compassion.â€•

The Buddha replied, â€œBodhisattva, fundamentally, the mind and its characteristics have n (non-substantial). [Therefore,] they fundamentally have no abode, [and the mind is] void and nothing. When the mind ceases to fabricate anything, it accesses void-calmness. At the bas all is void and calm, one realizes the void of the mind. Virtuous man! The signless mind is fre mind [itself] and self (ego). It is the same with the characteristics of all dharmas (all phenome related principles).â€• Vimukti Bodhisattva addressed the Buddha: â€œLord! For those sentient beings who conce of ego) or conceive of a mind (grasping of dharmas), what Dharma will awaken them and lea behind such shackles (bondage)?â€•

The Buddha replied, â€œVirtuous man, when someone conceives of a self, he should be led twelve-fold inter-dependent origination (co-origination) [comprising: ignorance, volition, cons body-mind formations, six sense-doors, contact, feeling/sensation, craving, clinging, becomi sickness/death]. The twelve-fold inter-dependent-origination derives from cause and effect. I effect are fabrications of the mind! Since (basically) the mind does not exist, much less the b [therefore] a person who conceives of a self, should be led to abandon the view that the self â€œ[Similarly] a person who conceives of no-self should be led to abandon his view that the exist. If a person conceives that the mind exists, he should be led to abandon [the view that] the mind] is subject to creation. If a person conceives that the mind can be extinguished, he abandon [the view that] the nature [of the mind] is subject to extinction. Once all the views a of the mind are extinguished, he immediately accesses Reality. Why? Because whatever tha (not subject to the process of birth/creation) is beyond extinction [since everything arises and through co-origination]; and whatever that is extinct [being devoid of nature] is beyond creati same with all the dharmas.â€•

Vimukti Bodhisattva addressed the Buddha: â€œLord! If a sentient being perceives that a dh creation, what view should he be advised to abandon? What view should he be advised to a perceives that a dharma is subject to extinction?â€•
The Buddha replied, â€œBodhisattva, if a sentient being perceives that a dharma [being bey creation/extinction] is subject to creation, let him abandon his view on the non-existence [of he perceives a dharma is subject to extinction, let him abandon his view on the existence [of these views are extinguished, he realizes the absolute non-existence of all dharmas and he definite non-projection [of the mind].â€• {Note: This is the Buddhaâ€™s unique way of logic concerning production of anything from (i) self, (ii) other, (iii) both self and other, and (iv) not and other. This most probably later formed the basis of Nagajunaâ€™s famous Madhyamak freedom from the four extremes concerning such views}.

Vimukti Bodhisattva addressed the Buddha: â€œLord! If a sentient being abides by non-crea
[he had realized] the non-creation [of dharmas]?â€•
The Buddha replied, â€œBy abiding in non-creation, he would actually be creating somethin does not abide by non-creation is the real non-creation. Bodhisattva, if one abides by non-cr creating (activating) [the mind] to extinguish creation! When creation and extinction are both extinguished, creation cannot take place and the mind will be void and calm, without any ab non-abiding mind is non-creating.â€•

Vimukti Bodhisattva addressed the Buddha: â€œIf the mind does not abide anywhere, is the and cultivation? Is there still learning left to be completed or no more learning required?â€•
The Buddha replied, â€œBodhisattva, a non-creating mind has neither egress nor access. It tathagatagarbha (the un-manifested â€˜storeâ€™ of every thing) is calm and motionless [by neither further learning nor free from further learning. When there is neither learning nor non

Chapter Three
The Practice of Non-Creation
At that time Cittaraja (Mind King) Bodhisattva heard the Buddhaâ€™s discourse of the Dhar

The Doctrine the Tathagata has pronounced, Transcends the world without signs.
It enables all sentient beings,
To completely abandon the leakages (the three realms).

Eradicating the knots and emptying both mind and self,
Is this [the state of] non-creation?
If nothing is being created,
How can one attain the non-creation [of dharmas]?
Then the Buddha proclaimed to Cittaraja Bodhisattva, â€œVirtuous man, the Dharma relatin

The Buddha replied, â€œA mind which is free from both abidance and attainment, has neith

The Benediction of Self-Enlightenment

At that time, Apratisthia (Non-Abiding) Bodhisattva heard the Buddhaâ€™s discourse on sin

At that time, Sariputra rose from his seat, came forward, and recited these stanzas:

The Buddha, replete with the sea of prajna,
Without abiding in the city of Nirvana,
Is like the wonderful lotus,

That is not grown in the high plains.
All buddhas underwent countless tests,
Without forsaking any defilement.
Only after saving the world did they access [Nirvana],
Like the lotus rising from the mud.
The six practices,
The bodhisattvas cultivate.
So are the three liberations,
The true path to bodhi.
Whether I now abide [by Nirvana] or not,
It will be as the Buddha has said.
I will return repeatedly to this place whence I came,
And leave only after completing [the bodhisattva path].
Furthermore, I will urge all sentient beings,
To join me [in pursuing the same vow],
May those who came before, or will come in the future,
All be led to climb (realize) the awakening of Reality.

Then the Buddha proclaimed to Sariputra: â€œThis is inconceivable! You will certainly acco bodhi in future. Countless sentient beings will transcend the sea of birth and death.â€•

At that time, the [sub-] assembly [of Mahayanists] all awakened to bodhi, and the [sub-] asse

Sariputra asked, â€œWhat is the four-line stanza? I beg [the Lord] to proclaim it.â€•

Thereupon, the Lord recited the stanza:

The essence of everything created by causes and originations,
Such essence [being void] is extinct, beyond creation.
Essence that extinguishes all that is subject to creation-extinction,
Such essence [being void] exists and not extinct (beyond co-origination).

When the great assembly heard the proclamation of this stanza, all were joyous. Everyone a

[as it is within the silent void that the inherent Self-Wisdom manifests].

The Tathagatagarbha (The Perpetual Store)

The Elder Brahmacarya asked, â€œWhat are the three practices?â€•

The Buddha replied, â€œFirst is the practice in accord with phenomena [knowing them to be Second is the practice in accord with consciousness [knowing the characteristics of everythi

The Buddha replied, â€œOneâ€™s wisdom would be inexhaustible. Briefly speaking, one w wisdom [of Nirvana] that removes lightning (momentary/temporary/partial insight) wisdom [o the path to buddhahood.

â€œElder, this is the working of these four great matters. The sayings of all the buddhas of t employ this wisdom.

â€œElder, further, the operation of these great functions involves three important aspects. F the mutual non-infringement between the internal (for self-liberation) and the external (when others) within the three saÂ-madhis {Note: please see the Buddhaâ€™s explanation later}. S discriminatory wisdom within the great matrix of subject [relating to the four elements and th consciousness in ending all obscurations]. Thirdly, the wisdom and non-distraction of thusne subject to the whims of all the great demons.

â€œElder, until the attainment of buddhahood, you and the others in the assembly should co and practise, without any temporary respite.â€•

The Elder Brahmacarya asked, â€œWhat are the three samadhis?â€•

The Buddha replied, â€œThe three samadhis are the samadhi of the void, the samadhi with and the samaÂ-dhi of non-expectation. These are the samadhis.â€•

The Elder Brahmacarya asked, â€œWhat is the great matrix of subject?â€•

The Buddha replied, â€œâ€˜Greatâ€™ means the four basic elements (earth, water, fire, an â€œSuch characteristics [created through the functioning of differentiation in co-origination] dharmas that are subject to creation-extinction, since they involve differentiation. If one were differentiation, then these dharmas would not be subject to extinction.â€•

In proclaiming the essence, the Tathagata then recited the stanza:

Dharmas created from differentiations (co-origination),
Are duly extinguished by differentiations,
Abandon all dharmas that are subject to differentiations,
Then they will neither be created nor extinguished.

When the Elder Brahmacarya heard this stanza, his mind was jubilant and elated. Wishing t essence, he recited the stanza:

All dharmas are originally calm and extinct.
This calm-extinction is also unborn (beyond creation).
All dharmas that are subject to creation-extinction,
Such dharmas are not beyond creation.
They are not the same [as those beyond creation-extinction],
As each is subject to either permanence or impermanence.
This [Dharma of the Buddha] leaves all dualities,
But also does not linger in oneness.
If dharmas are [illusorily] said to be one,
It would be like the [illusory] hair of fire-rings,
[Or] mistaking heat-waves (mirages) for water.
All [such perceptions] are false and deceptive.
[Also] if one perceives the nonexistence of dharmas,
[This perception creates] a dharma of nothingness.
Like a blind man who [ignorantly] believes otherwise,
Preaching a dharma like (nonexistent) hair of a tortoise.
I have now heard the Buddhaâ€™s exposition [on],
The Dharma beyond dualistic views,
Also not relying on abidance between [such views].
Therefore it is beyond grasping or abiding.
The Dharmas spoken by the tathagatas,
Are completely from non-abidance.

I, from the place with non-abidance,
Pay respect to the tathagatas from here.
Respectfully saluting the characteristics of the tathagatas,
Their motionless wisdom equals to empty space.
Free from grasping and lingering,
I respectfully salute their non-abiding bodies.
Everywhere I,
Always see all the tathagatas.
I only wish all the tathagatas,
Will explain the perpetual Dharma to me.

Then the Tathagata stated: â€œAll good men! You lisÂ-ten attentively and I will explain for y Dharma.

â€œVirtuous man, the perpetual Dharma is not a perpetual dharma. It is neither the spoken

After Elder Brahmacarya heard this exposition, he recited the stanza:

Mentation and forms, the phenomena [created by] differentiation, Together with dharmas â€“ these are called the three [delusions].
Absolute thusness and sublime wisdom (the two of Reality),
[The above] altogether makes five.

I now know these dharmas,
Are latched by permanence and impermanence.
Accessing the path of creation and extinction,
Is impermanence not permanence.
The Dharma on the Void spoken by the Tathagata,
Is beyond impermanence and permanence.
Being without co-origination, [this Dharma] is unborn.
Since it is beyond creation, it has no extinction.
Grasping at existence [of co-origination],
Is like plucking a flower from the sky,
Or expecting a barren womanâ€™s child â€“
The Absolute is beyond grasping.
Abandoning all clinging to co-originations,
One also does not linger on all that is subject to extinction,
Or on Self-essence (base consciousness) and the [four] great [elements].
By relying on thusness, therefore, one attains Reality.
Therefore the Dharma of Reality-thusness,
Is constantly free within thusness.
All the tens of thousands of dharmas,
Are not the fabrications of the consciousness of thusness.
As the Dharma once detached from the eight consciousnesses is void, Hence it is explained from the perspective of the void.
By abandoning all dharmas subject to creation-extinction,
One dwells in Nirvana.
Being overcome by the great compassion [within],
[One] does not linger within the extinction of Nirvana.
Transmuting both object and subject of clinging,
One accesses the tathagatagarbha.
When the great assembly heard this essence, all attained right vocation (spiritual mission) a beyond-coming-and-going (beyond creation-extinction) sea of the tathagatagarbha.

Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva asked, â€œWhy are all dharmas not created through co-origination

Proclaiming the essence, the Tathagata recited the stanza:

If dharmas are created by co-originations,
No dharmas can exist when co-originations are absent.
Since dharmas are devoid of [independent] nature,
How can co-originations create dharmas?
{Note: This is possibly another example of the Buddhaâ€™s way of negating sentient being everything as we saw in Chapter two.}

Then Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva asked, â€œIf dharmas are beyond creation, how can the Bud that dharmas are created by the mind?â€•

Thereupon, the Lord recited the stanza:

Dharmas that are created by the mind,
Such dharmas cling to subject and object.
Like the sky-flowers in a drunkardâ€™s eyes,
Such dharmas are still not the otherwise (thusness).

Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva then remarked, â€œIf dharmas are like this, then they would be wit like thusness). Dharmas that have no parallels ought to be self-generated (without causes).

Thereupon the Lord recited the stanza:

Dharmas are basically free from existence and nonexistence,
So is the case for existence of self (ego) and others.
With neither beginning (existence) nor end (nonexistence),
The success or failure [of everything] is non-abiding (void).

Then Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva said [quoting the Buddha], â€œThe characteristics of all dhar thusness, all dharmas without [characteristics of] thusness ought to be the same.â€•

The Buddha agreed, â€œAll dharmas without [characteristics of] thusness are the same [si

Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva said, â€œThis is inconceivable. The characteristics of thusness is n

Thereupon, the Lord recited the stanza:

All dharmas which are [apparently] void and calm,
Such dharmas are calm but not void.
When the mind has not [awakened to the] void,
It is a grasping mind that is not calm.

Then Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva said, â€œThis Dharma [of the One-mind] is not of the three tr truths relating to] sense-objects, the void and mind are also nonexistent. Since these [three] basically non-existent, the Dharma [of the One-mind] should also be nonexistent.â€•

Thereupon the Lord recited the stanza:

Dharmas are basically without self-nature,
They arise through co-originating factors.
Not [abiding by] thusness,
Is how they are in thusness.

Then Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva asked, â€œAs all dharmas are beyond creation and extinctio are not all one (identical)?â€•

Thereupon, the Lord recited the stanza:

An abode for dharmas does not exist,
Their characteristics and classifications are void, hence, nonexistent.
These two, naming and speech, and all dharmas,
Are the graspings by the subjects (sense-organs).

Then Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva remarked, â€œThe characteristics of all dharmas do not abid

Thereupon, the Lord recited the stanza:

The object and subject of creation are two,
These two are subject and object of co-origination.
Since both are without independent nature,
Clinging to their existence is an illusion, like a sky-flower.
When consciousness has not arisen,
Sense-realms also are not being created.
When sense-realms have not been created,
Consciousness is also being extinguished (non-arising).
As these two are basically nonexistent,
They both neither exist nor do not exist.
Consciousness that is not created is also nonexistent,
How do sense-realms derive their own existence?â€•

Then Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva remarked, â€œSimilarly, the characteristics of dharmas are v

The Buddha replied, â€œBodhisattva! Admonish the mind on the three great matters, and a the three noble truths.â€•

Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva asked, â€œHow may one admonish oneâ€™s mind on the three m
the one practice via the three noble truths?â€•

The Buddha replied, â€œAs regards the three great matters: the first is called cause, the se Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva asked, â€œLord! Such a Dharma [on the void] would be free from c co-originations. If a dharma is not co-originated, there should be no causes that can be gene such a motionless dharma access the [path of the] tathagatas?â€•

Wishing to proclaim the meaning, the Tathagata recited the stanza:

The characteristics of all dharmas
Are void, nonexistent, and motionless by nature.
These dharmas at a specific time,
Are not arisen (not affected) through such time.
[As] dharmas have no differences in time,
They do not arise through differences in time.

Dharmas are beyond motion and stillness.
They are calm and extinct as their natures are void.
When their natures are void, calm, and extinct,
Then dharmas can appear [through co-origination].
When detached from all characteristics, they abide calmly.
As they abide calmly, they do not co-originate.
All co-originated dharmas
Are co-originated, [but] not created.
As co-originating factors are not created or extinguished,
The nature of creation-extinction is hence void and calm.
The nature of co-origination gives rise to subject and object,
These co-originations arise from basic co-originating [nature].
Hence dharmasâ€™ arising is not [directly due to] co-origination.
This is also the case with the non-arising of co-origination.
All dharmas that arise through co-origination,
Such dharmas [being ultimately void] are purely co-originated.
The co-originating characteristics of creation and extinction,
Are themselves free from creation and extinction.
Those characteristics [being the Absolute] are thusly and real,
Basically neither manifest nor disappear.
All dharmas [being void of nature] at a specific time,
Co-originate manifestations and disappearances themselves.
Therefore the absolutely pure base,
Is not caused by other forces,
Precisely when this is subsequently attained,
One [re-]attains the Self-attainment (Self-Enlightenment).

When Ksitigarbha Bodhisattva heard what the Buddha said, his mind-ground (deepest part o blissful and free. All in the assembly had no more doubts. Knowing their mind-state, [Ksitiga recited the stanza:

I knew the doubts in all their mind,
And accordingly inquired sincerely and extensively,
[Through] the Tathagataâ€™s great compassion and kindness,
[He] has analyzed [the doubts] with none remaining.
Everyone in the two [sub-] assemblies,
Has clearly understood.
From the Absolute-Domain,

I [vow to] liberate all sentient beings.
Like the great compassion of the Buddha,
Not abandoning the great vow.
Hence at the only-child state (viewing everyone as oneâ€™s child),
[The bodhisattva] abides amidst defilements [to liberate others].

Summary on The Vajrasamadhi Sutra

When liberating sentient beings, do not conceive whether it takes place or not.
Guide sentient beings to abandon mind and ego, for both are basically void.
The mind and its characteristics have no origin, no abode, void and calm.
Mind is free from both mind [itself] and self (ego).
Someone who conceives of a self should contemplate inter-independent origination. But this

A person who conceives of a self should abandon the view that the self exists.
A person who conceives of no-self should abandon his view that the self does not exist.
If a person conceives that the mind exists, he should be led to abandon the view that mind is attain not only deep concentration of the mind but also liberation from all kinds of mental and physical dukkha or suffering, through realisation of our body-mind processes and their true nature.

As I explained to you, Samatha meditation is practised to attain higher concentration of the mind. So when you practise Samatha meditation, the first type of mental training or mental culture, you have to concentrate your mind on a single object of meditation. You want to concentrate your mind on a single object very deeply. That object may be a concept or observed reality, but most Samatha meditative objects are concepts. There are also a few objects which are observed reality as the object of meditation in the first type of training and Samatha meditation. But whatever the object may be the aim of Samatha meditation is to obtain deep concentration of the mind, or the higher concentration of the mind.

So you have to take a single object and focus your mind on it. When you focus your mind on this object gradually the mind will be concentrated on it very deeply. But in the beginning of the practise your mind may go out or wander. Your mind doesn't stay with the object always. Sometimes it just goes out and thinks about something else. It wanders and goes astray. Then you have to bring the mind to the object and focus it on that object again and again. Whenever the mind goes out you bring it back and focus it on the object of meditation. In this way your mind gradually becomes concentrated well on the object of meditation.

As you have practised it for some days or months the concentration becomes better and better, deeper and deeper. Finally the mind is absolutely concentrated on the object of meditation as its absorbed into the object of meditation. Such a state of mind which is absorbed into the object of meditation is called jnana, or apana in Pali. Jnana means 'fixed as', or absorption. When the mind is totally fixed to the object of meditation it's called jnana, fixed mind. And also it is called absorption, apana.

Jnana has four stage, or five stages, in accordance with the teaching of the Buddha. So, the second stage of jnana concentration becomes better than the first. Then the third stage, the concentration better than the second. So with the fourth. As long as the mind is deeply concentrated on the object of meditation its free from all mental impurities such as desire, greed, lust, hatred, anger, ignorance, and jealousy. Because there are no impurities in the mind which is absorbed into the object of meditation you feel happy and peaceful, and calm and tranquil. Tranquillity, serenity and calmness is the result of Samatha meditation.

But in ancient times there were some devotees who practised Samatha meditation with a view to obtaining supernormal powers such as clairvoyance and clairaudience. These supernormal powers can be attained based on all the four jnanas, of the four stages. When a meditator is skilled in entering any stage of jnana he can then proceed with his meditation in order to attain psychical or supernormal powers. But though he may be able to attain them through the four stages of jnana, concentration, he is not able to rightly understand the intrinsic nature of mental and physical phenomena. He is not able to destroy any mental defilement because the purpose of Samatha meditation is to obtain deep higher concentration of the mind and psychical or supernormal powers. Because he is not able to uproot any of the mental defilements such as anger, hatred, desire, and craving, he cannot get free from all kinds of suffering, mental or physical, because these mental defilements are the causes of the suffering, dukkha. As long as one can uproot or exterminate these mental defilements, mental impurities, he is subject to suffering, dukkha.

The aim of Vipassana meditation is to free oneself from all kinds of dukkha, mental suffering and physical suffering, through realisation of the body-mind processes and their true nature. So if you are able to realise mental and physical phenomena as they really are you can do away with all kinds of mental impurities or mental defilements which arise dependent on misunderstanding or ignorance of mental and physical phenomena and their true nature. That's why we have to practise Satipatthana Vipassana meditation, insight meditation.

But you may practise Samatha meditation with a view to gaining some deep concentration on which your insight knowledge is built. Such a kind of Samatha meditation is more beneficial than that which I explained to you for the purpose of higher concentration and supernormal powers. So in ancient times, in the time of the Buddha some meditators developed Samatha meditation further, first of all so they could gain some degree of concentration such as access concentration, and if was possible jnana concentration or absorption concentration. When they had attained absorption concentration or jnana concentration they made this the basis for Vipassana meditation or Insight Meditation.

Here access concentration means that neighbouring concentration to jnana concentration. When you have attained access or neighbouring concentration you are sure to attain jnana concentration, absorption concentration, in a short time. If the purpose of a meditator is to practise Vipassana meditation based on excessive concentration he or she can attain this by means of Samatha meditation. Such kind of Vipassana meditation is known as Vipassana meditation or insight meditation preceded by Samatha meditation.

So Vipassana meditation is of two types. The first, Vipassana meditation, insight meditation is preceded by Samatha meditation. The second is the pure Vipassana meditation or insight meditation not preceded by Samatha meditation. The first type of Vipassana meditation or Insight Meditation is practised by those who have ample time to devote to their meditation. They have to spend maybe three or four months on Samatha meditation. And when they are satisfied with their attainment of jnana concentration they proceed with Vipassana meditation.

Pure Vipassana meditation is practised by those who haven't enough time to devote to their meditation like yourselves, because you do not have three or four months or six months or a year for your meditation. So you can spend about ten days on your meditation. For such meditators pure Vipassana meditation is suitable. That's why we have to conduct a ten days Vipassana meditation retreat. Actually ten days meditation is not enough. The period is too short a time for a meditator to succeed in any noticeable experience in his meditation. But there are some who have some experience in Vipassana meditation who when their meditation experience becomes major can attain the higher stages of insight knowledge of the body-mind processes of their true nature. Although you can spend just ten days on your meditation, if you strive to attain the deep concentration with a strenuous effort without much interval or break in the course of your meditation for the whole day, then you are able to have some new experience of meditation. So the point is to practise intensively and strenuously as much as you can.

* Preparatory Stages

Before you practise insight meditation there are some preparatory stages you should go through. The first the Pali scriptures mention is when one has spoken contemptuously or in jest or malice to or about a noble one - a puggala in Pali - who has attained some state of sanctity or enlightenment in accordance with the teaching of the Buddha. Then he should apologise to the Buddha. He should apologise that noble one, a puggala. If he is not available here, if he is deceased, he should make apology through his meditation teacher. I think you need not do this because you may not have spoken ill of any noble one, a puggala, because you may not met such a person in Australia.

The second stage is that you should entrust yourself to the Lord Buddha who teaches the technique of Vipassana meditation, by interesting yourself in the Buddha you can go through your course happily and peacefully. Though you may have unwholesome or dreadful visions in your meditation you won't fear them because you have entrusted yourself to the Buddha. Also you have to place yourself under the guidance of your meditation teacher so he can frankly instruct you without any hesitancy. If you do not place yourself under the guidance of your teacher he may not be reluctant to instruct you even though you have some defects in your practise.

* Four Protective Meditations

When you have done this you should develop the four protective meditations for some minutes. These four are (1) recollection of the Buddha's attributes; (2) development of love and kindness or metta towards all living beings; (3) reflection upon the loathsome nature of our body; (4) reflection on the nature of death.

When you recollect the attributes of the Buddha you can select one of nine attributes. Out of these nine attributes of the Buddha you can choose the first or the second or any of the nine as the object of your meditation and reflect on it. Here Arahat is the first attribute. Arahat means the Buddha who is worthy of honour because he has completely destroyed all mental activities and attained to the cessation of all kinds of dukkha. You have to recollect this achievement of the Buddha, thinking about its meaning. That's the worthiness of honour through his attainment of the cessation of all kinds of suffering by destroying all mental defilements so he lived in peace and bliss and happiness. When you recollect these attributes you feel happy and brave to face any kind of dukkha or suffering in the course of your meditation as well as in your daily life. This must be done about two minutes.

Then you have to develop your metta, loving-kindness, the feeling of loving-kindness towards all living beings, wishing all living beings peace and happiness, and free from all kinds of mental and physical suffering, dukkha. This feeling of detached love is developed in yourself. Then you feel happy and tranquil, your mind easily concentrated on any object of meditation. This must be done about five minutes.

After that you have to reflect upon the loathsome nature of the body, thinking about its repulsiveness such as blood, pus, phlegm, intestines, and so on. This body is full of these impurities and repulsiveness. The result is you are detached from this body to a certain extent because you find it loathsome or repulsive. This also must be done about two minutes.

Then after that you should reflect upon the nature of death. Life is uncertain, death is certain. Life is precarious and death is sure. Everyone who is born is subject to death. So all men are mortal. In this way you have to think about the surety of death for every living being. You can arouse strenuous effort in your practise by thinking, `I'll have to practise this meditation strenuously before I die, or before I am dead.

This is what the Buddhist meditational texts mention as a preliminary stage for both the Samatha meditator and Vipassana meditator. They are not compulsory, not indispensable. But the texts mention they should be done. These four protective meditations, recollection of the Buddha's attributes and development of loving-kindness, metta, towards all living beings is the most important thing for a meditator to pacify his distracted mind and also to practise meditation happily and peacefully. So you should do that.

* Beginning Vipassana Meditation

When you have done these preliminary stages then you have to focus your mind on your bodily and mental processes, be aware of any mental and physical processes as they really are. That is the beginning of Vipassana meditation. The principle of Vipassana meditation is to be aware of whatever arises in your body and mind as it really occurs. In other words, any activity of the body and mind must be very attentively observed as it really is. This is the principle of Vipassana meditation. So any mental process or physical process is the object of Vipassana meditation. When you find any mental process or physical process on any part of your body and mind distinctively rising, then you must note it, you must observe it, you must be aware of it as it really is.

Any mental or physical phenomenon can be the object of insight meditation, Vipassana meditation. You have a variety of meditational objects in Vipassana meditation, not like Samatha meditation. In Samatha meditation you have to take only a single object to focus your mind. But in Vipassana meditation there are many varieties of mental or physical processes as the object of meditation.

The mentality or physicality which is more pronounced than the other should be observed, you should be mindful of as it is. But the beginner may get confused what object to observe or to be mindful of. To avoid this confusion the most Venerable Mahasi Sayadaw taught this technique of meditation to his disciples in accordance with the four foundations of mindfulness, instructing them to begin with the movement of the abdomen.

When you focus your mind on the abdomen you find a rising movement and falling movement. When you breath in the abdomen rises; when you breathe out the abdomen falls. So rising movement and falling movement is the primary object of this insight meditation to begin with. But though the abdomen rises through the pressure of the air you breathe, this meditation is not a breathing meditation, not a respiratory meditation. Though the abdomen falls through the pressure of the breath which is going out, this is not a breathing meditation because there the Omniscient Buddha classified the wind or the air in six groups.

* The Wind or Air Element

One group of the air or wind is vayo-dhatu. That means the wind which exists in the abdomen. This also must be focussed, must be realised by a meditator and not identified with his self, his person or bis being. The other aspect of wind or air is breathing, respiration. Though the respiration is connected with the rise and fall of the abdomen, the rising movement/falling movement is not breathing, not respiration. It's the wind or the air which expands and contracts in the abdomen. So contemplation of the abdomen's movement is not breathing meditation, not respiration meditation.

When you practise respiration meditation your mind has to focus at the nostrils or the top of the upper lips. You focus the mind there and note it and breathe in. When you breathe out you focus your mind on the nostrils or on the top of the upper lips, and note outward breathing and so on. So, when you focus your mind on the abdominal movement and concentrate on it then this contemplation is not contemplation breathing meditation.

Then what is it? This is the meditation of elements. Element here means the physical elements: wind or air. We have to focus our mind not only on the wind or air elements but also upon the other mental or physical elements too. Whatever is predominant, mental phenomena or physical phenomena must be observed as they are. So you have to focus your mind on the abdominal movement and notice or observe it: rising-falling, making mental note as rising-falling.

* Sitting

When you sit in the wrong position you can't feel the pressure of the rising movement or falling movement very well, so you have to sit comfortably in the right position. You should not sit in the cross legged position because if you cross one leg against another in a short time you feel pressure, a painful sensation of aching or numbness. You need not sit in a cross legged position. Your legs must be evenly placed side by side, the right leg inside and the left leg outside. Then you don't feel any pressure because the two legs are evenly placed side by side.

Then your body must be kept in an erect position. Your body must be straight. The neck and head also must be in a straight line with the body. But you must not stretch out your body. You must keep it straight erect, then close your eyes. The right hand must be put on the left one with the palm upward. But you may put both hands on both knees with the palms upward. Now relax yourself. Do not feel tense both physically and mentally. Relieve all your tensions, mental or physical tensions, and sit as comfortably as you can.

* Rising and Falling Movement of the Abdomen

Then focus the mind on the abdominal movement and observe the outward movement and inward movement of the body, making a mental note: rising, falling. When the abdomen rises you note rising; when the abdomen falls you notice falling. You must not pay any attention to the form of the abdomen. What you should perceive is the pressure of the rising movement and the falling movement. Whenever the rising movement is distinct you should note it rising. When the falling is pronounced you note it falling. In the beginning of the practise you need to level [?] such as rising, falling, sitting, touching and so on. You have to make a mental note. Because for the beginner levelling or mental note helps him to focus the mind on the object very precisely and closely. So in the beginning of the practise you need to level or make a mental note such as rising, falling, rising, falling.

During your contemplation of the rise and fall of the abdomen your mind may go out. Then when the mind goes out you must now bring it back to the primary object, that's the rise and fall of the abdomen. As soon as you are aware that your mind is wandering you follow it and note it. Observe it as it is. Say, `wandering, wandering,` or `thinking, thinking,` or imagining, imagining,` and so on until that wandering mind has disappeared. Only after the wandering mind has disappeared do you return to the primary object, the rise and fall of the abdomen. Then note as usual rising, falling, rising, falling.

In the beginning of the practise your mind is still with the rise and fall of the abdomen, the primary object, about say five or ten seconds. And then it goes out. Whenever you know that the mind is going out you should be aware of it going out and make a mental note, `we are going out,` or `thinking, thinking,`

`imagining, imagining.` If you see any mental image then you note, seeing, seeing, seeing until that mental image has disappeared. Only after it has disappeared do you return to the primary object and note as usual, rising falling, rising falling.

In the beginning of the practise the rise and fall of the abdomen is not so pronounced, not so predominant to the beginner's mind. Then the meditator is not satisfied with the movement of the abdomen so he makes it vigorous, rapid or quick. You mustn't do that. You mustn't breathe quickly or vigorously or deeply so that you can feel it very distinctly. Because if you do that you get fatigued. You feel fatigue in a short time, then you can't concentrate on it. So breathing must be normal. When you put some mental effort in your noting of the rise and fall of the abdomen you can feel it to a certain extent and note rising falling, rising falling.

As you have meditated say about four or five days then the rise and fall of the abdominal movement will become clearer and clearer, more and more distinct to your mind. So in the beginning of this practise, not satisfied with your noting of the abdominal movement, you must not breathe in deeply or vigorously or quickly. Breathing must be normal. Note as much as it is distinct to your mind.

* Distractions

During your contemplation of the rising movement and falling movement of the abdomen you may hear any sound, a voice, a noise. And you should observe it, make a mental note, hearing hearing hearing hearing, about four or five times. After that you come to the primary object, the rise and fall of the abdomen, and note as usual.

Sometimes you may smell any scent or odour while you are contemplating on the abdominal movement. Then you leave the abdominal movement alone and note: smelling smelling smelling. Only after that you come to return to the primary object and note as usual.

Sometimes you may feel hot or cold while you are engaged in the rising and fall of the abdomen. Then you leave the abdomen alone and focus your mind on the feeling of cold or the sensation of the hot, and observe it as it really is. Make a mental note: hot, hot or cold, cold. When the feeling of cold or hot subsides you return to the primary object, the rising and fall of the abdomen and note as usual rising falling, rising, falling.

When you have sat say about fifteen or twenty minutes you may feel pain or stiffening or itching on any part of your body. Then you must observe that painful or itching sensation as it really occurs. Make a mental note: pain pain pain pain pain. When you note the pain your noting should be energetic, precise. When the pain is noted superficially and lightly then you can't overcome it. Actually the pain doesn't become severe, but with the power of deep concentration the mind becomes so sensitive to the pain that it perceives it very well, so you think the pain becomes severe. So you have to continue to contemplate the pain as much as possible with utmost patience. That patience is the best quality of a meditator, to bear the pain and to overcome it. However severe the pain may be you must not give it up. You should concentrate on it as much as possible with the utmost patience.

So not only for the pain itself but also in other aspects of this meditation patience is the best quality of a yogi. You have to be patient with your mind; you have to be patience with your physical discomfort; you have to be patient with the disturbances coming from outside. When you are not patient with these things your concentration very often is broken, goes away. So you have to have the best quality of a meditator, that's patience.

There is a Burmese saying: Ten yi khan neg ban yau . The meaning is: Patience leads to Nibbana, or the cessation of all kinds of suffering. So patience is the best quality of a yogi who will be successful in this meditational practise.

Sometimes you can't bear the severity of the pain. Then you want to change your position so that you can relieve it. You must not change your position in a sitting, but there is an exception when a meditator can sit say an hour without changing position. After an hour's meditation if he wants to change his position he must not do that. He should get up and practise walking meditation because the changing of the position in a sitting makes your concentration break. So it's not good.

When you change your position very often this becomes habitual so that when your meditational experience is even at an advanced stage you want to change your position though you don't have any unbearable pain. Sometimes unconsciously you have changed your position. Only after you have changed position do you know, `Ah, I have changed my position.` Then concentration breaks.

So those who can sit without changing position an hour should not change this position in a sitting even once. But for beginners if they are not able to sit when thirty minutes, half an hour, is up without changing position they can change once in a sitting, not twice.

Suppose the beginner meditates in sitting then after ten minutes` meditation feels a painful sensation and wants to change his position. Then he can change it because he cannot sit even an hour. So he should change his position, but this must be done mindfully. When you want to change you must note, wanting wanting. That's a mental process which must be observed: wanting wanting, or wishing wishing, intending intending. Then you change your position, you stretch out your legs, and stretching, stretching, stretching. Then again you shift your body, then shifting shifting, moving moving. When you settle it on again, then touching touching, sitting sitting. When you bend your legs, bending bending, and so on. All actions and movements involved in changing the position you must be mindful of as they really are.

After you have changed position then you return to the primary object, the rise and fall of the abdomen, and note as well rising falling, rising falling. But after five or ten minutes` meditation you may feel pain unbearable, then you may feel you want to change your position. You mustn't do that. Patiently observe the pain as much as possible as long as you can. When you feel it unbearable then get up and practise walking meditation. You may sit say about twenty minutes or thirty minutes, it doesn't matter. You may sit as long as you can with a change of position once - only once, not twice. After that you practise walking meditation.

As I told you this Vipassana meditation, insight meditation, is to put an end to all kinds of suffering through realisation of our body-mind processes and their true relation. That's why we have to observe whatever mental states, emotional states or physical activities become prominent to our mind. That's why we have to be mindful of our painful sensation. Make a mental note, pain pain. The same with the stiffening, itching or any physical discomfort or mental or emotional states which are arising very prominently.

Sometimes you may have two or more objects of meditation, that's two or more objects of physical mental processes which are arising at the same moment. Then you may get puzzled which object should be noted. You should not get puzzled about it. It is the most prominent object of physical or mental processes that you must be aware of.

Suppose when you observe the rise and fall of the abdomen you feel numbness on your leg. And also you feel an itching sensation in the back. And your mind is also thinking about something, about your walk or your travel. Then you have four objects of meditation. One is the rise and fall of the abdomen, the other is numbness, the third is the itching sensation in the back, and the fourth is a thought about your family. What should you do with these four objects that you should be mindful of?

You should note the most prominent object. When numbness on the leg is more distinct than the other three you should note, numb. You should observe it, make a mental note, numb numb, or numbness numbness and so on until it has subsided. After it has subsided you return to the primary object, the rise and fall of the abdomen.

But it may be the itching sensation which is more distinct than the abdominal movement. Then you should go to the itching sensation and note as usual, itching itching itching. Focus in your mind on the itching sensation attentively and precisely.

Of the four objects of meditation, if the thought about your family is more distinct than the other three then you should observe the thought, observe this mental state which must be realised by the meditator. Observing the thought, make a mental note, thinking thinking thinking thinking. When you note the thought that noting must be energetic, precise and somewhat quick, so that the mindfulness or the noting becomes more and more powerful than the process of thinking. When the noting mind becomes more powerful than the process of thinking, then it overwhelms the process of thinking and that process of thinking stops. After the thought has stopped or disappeared you return to the primary object, the rise and fall of the abdomen, and note it as usual.

In this way when you have two or more objects of a mental or physical process you must be aware of the most distinct or prominent object of meditation, making mental note as it is.

To summarise, be mindful of mental states, emotional states, and physical processes in sitting meditation. You have to begin with the rise and fall of the abdomen as soon as you have settled yourself on the seat. But if there are any other mental states, emotional states or physical processes which are more distinct than the abdominal movement then you observe the one which is the more pronounced. Note it as usual. After that object has disappeared you return to the primary object, that's the rise and fall of the abdomen, and note it as usual.

* The Four Foundations of Mindfulness.

First of the four foundations of mindfulness, the meditator must be aware of whatever arises within the body and mind as it really occurs. So while you are walking also you must be aware of the movement of the foot. When you walk, first of all you must stand still at the starting point of the walk. Stand still and first make a mental note, standing standing standing, about ten times, perceiving the inner posture of standing. Not the form of the body but the erect posture for standing. After that you walk, left step, right step. Then you note, left right, left right, being aware of the movement of the foot very precisely and attentively. Or you can note, stepping stepping stepping.

But your mind doesn't stay with the movement of the foot very long. It may stay with the movement of the foot say about one or two minutes, then the mind goes out, wanders about. But in the beginning of the practise you are not aware of the wandering mind. You think you are focussing your mind on the movement of the foot but actually the mind is going out still asleep. As soon as you know that the mind is wandering or thinking about something else then unconsciously you bring it back to the foot. Then you have a chance to note the wandering mind because the mind has already stayed with the movement of the foot. Then you have to note left right, left right. Labelling or seeing is not the important thing. What is important is to note the movement of the foot, to perceive the movement of the foot, to be aware of the movement of the foot, but without labelling or mental note.

Your mind may not at first be able to focus on the movement of the foot very precisely. That's why we use labelling as an instrument to help focus our mind on the movement of the foot. But when you have practised walking meditation for say about half an hour, you may be able to note that the mind is wandering when it goes out. As soon as you know the mind is wandering you must stop walking and make a mental note, wandering wandering, or thinking thinking, imagining imagining, as the case may be. After that you return to the movement of the foot and note, left right,

When you are able to concentrate to a certain extent by being aware of the movement of the foot, make a mental note left and right, you should note two parts of the step: lifting parts and dropping parts. When you lift the foot note it, lifting. When you put it down note it, putting. In this way: lifting, putting, lifting, putting. Or lifting dropping, lifting dropping. When you note two parts of a step you need not label left and right. Left and right must be dropped when you make a mental note, lifting dropping, lifting dropping. Slowly not quickly. Gradually you must make your step slower and slower so that you can easily note the movement of the foot very well.

When you are well able to note lifting dropping then you can increase to one more object. Three parts of a step must be noted: lifting part, pushing part, dropping part. When you lift the foot note lifting. When you push it forward note pushing. When you drop it down you note dropping. In this way lifting, pushing, dropping; lifting pushing dropping.

If you find it difficult to perceive the movement of the foot because of labelling or making a mental note, then you should try without labelling or making a mental note. Just be aware of the movement of the foot: lifting movement, pushing forward movement, and dropping movement.

When you reach the other end of the walk you have to stand still and note your posture of standing, the posture of your body, standing standing about ten times. When you want to turn your body then note wanting wanting, then intending intending, then turning turning, very slowly. The movement of turning must be noted very slowly. Then again when you face the direction you came, then you stand still and note the standing posture ten times. Then walk again, lifting pushing dropping, and lifting pushing dropping. And so on.

If you are able to walk an hour it's better, because in walking meditation the movement of the foot, the object of meditation is very distinct, very clear to your mind so you can easily observe it. You can easily be aware of it. But as the principle of Vipassana meditation goes on, any mental states, emotional states or physical activities must be observed as they are so, except sitting and walking.

There are many actions and movements you have to do in your daily life. Those daily activities also must be noted such as stretching of the arms and bending of the arms, raising the hand, putting down the hand, and sitting down and rising from the seat. All the actions and movements you are doing must be observed as they really occur: while you are eating, while you are washing, while you are showering, while you are preparing your beds. There are many many activities involved in these actions. These activities must be noted, you must be aware of them. To be able to note these activities you have to deliberately slow down your actions and movements.

In the next talk I'll continue to explain to you the practical exercise on this meditation. May all of you rightly understand the technique of this meditation and practise intensively during this retreat and achieve your goal.

For beginners, and also in the beginning of the practise for experienced meditators too, in every walking the first ten minutes should be spent noting left and right. But about after two days or two or three days meditation the experienced meditator should spend about five minutes noting left and right. You have to slow down your stepping. And for the beginner he should note left right, left right about ten minutes. After that he should note either two parts or three parts.

Here two parts means a step is noted in two parts. The lifting part and the dropping part of the step must be noted. So you have to note lifting dropping, lifting dropping. But if you think you are able to note three steps you can skip the noting of two steps and go straight to the noting of three parts. That means after you have noted the left and right for ten minutes you pick up three parts of a step: lifting pushing dropping, lifting pushing dropping. Awareness of two parts of a step is not very good because if you actually lift the foot and drop it down then you have to lift it from the same place and you have to put it down to the same place - because after you have lifted the foot actually you have to push it forward to a certain extent a certain distance, and then you put it down. Without noting the pushing movement after the lifting movement you have skipped one process of the pushing movement and then you note dropping. The middle part of the step is lost. So if you think you are able to note three parts you should note them as: lifting pushing dropping, lifting pushing dropping. Your stepping must be short. The step should be about the length of a foot so that you can put your foot down very well and note it very precisely and closely. If your step is long, before you put your foot well on the ground or on the floor then unconsciously you have already lifted the heel of the other foot. Then you lose awareness of the lifting of the heel when you note lifting. That is because your step is long. So your step must not be long. It should be about the length of the foot so that you can concentrate your mind well on its movement very precisely, and also to have a clear experience of its movement. Then after you have put down your foot very well, established it in its place, you begin to lift the heel of the other foot. Then you can note it very well and you can be aware of the very beginning of the lifting of the heel of the other foot. So your stepping should be about the length of a foot, not longer than that, So you should be careful. Then when you drops your foot down then your foot touches the ground on the floor, the carpet, and you can note it touching. In this way you can note lifting, pushing, dropping, touching. Then when your foot touches the ground or the floor or the carpet you are to lift the other foot from the very beginning of the lifting of the heel. When you are about to lift the heel of the other foot you have to press the front floor a little bit. You must be aware of that pressing. After you have noted the pressure of the foot your mind goes to the other foot and note it as lifting, slowly. Then again lifting then pushing then putting down or dropping, touching, pressing. Lifting, pushing, dropping, touching, pressing. But the commentary said a step may be noted in six parts. When you lift the heel note, lifting; when you raise the toes note, raising. In this way, lifting, raising. Then pushing, dropping, touching, pressing. You'll have to slow down your step very well. If you do not slow the stepping you are not able to note these three parts of the step.

Here again I want to tell you that this Vipassana meditation is practised to realise body-mind processes and their true nature. So whatever you are aware of, bodily processes or mental processes, the aim of awareness is to realise them in their true nature. You should keep this in your mind when you practise this meditation. This meditation is not just for concentration but for realisation of mental physical processes too. That realisation enables the meditator to be free from all kinds of mental and physical sufferings and to live happily and blissfully. That realisation is called vipassana nana, insight knowledge. Insight knowledge leads a person to the enlightenment which destroys all kinds of suffering.

So very action is preceded by a mental process a wishing, wanting or intention. When you wish to lift the foot you do it. So lifting of the foot is preceded by wishing, or wanting or intention which are mental processes, mental phenomena. Not only lifting of the foot but also all other actions and movements are preceded by wishing, wanting or intention, mental processes. So if you are able to note this mental process - wishing, wanting or intention - you come to realise the relationship between the movement of the foot and the mental process that's intention or wishing or wanting. To realise how these two processes - physical and mental processes of intention - are related to each other you have to attain deep concentration by being aware of the movement of the foot. And when you have realised how these two processes are related to each other you don't have any idea of a person who is walking, a being who is lifting the foot, a self who is pushing forward the foot. What you realise is that there's an intention of wishing, a mental process, which causes the movement of the foot to arise. Without intention or wishing or wanting lifting of the foot, the movement cannot be done. In this way you come to realise the law of cause and effect in your walking meditation.

So you have to note intending, but you can note wishing or wanting. Usually we instruct our yogis to note intending, lifting; intending, raising - raising of the toes; intending, pushing; intending, dropping; touching, intending, pressing. When you note touching it's not preceded by the intention, because as soon as you drop your foot to the ground it touches the ground whether it has intention or not. Actually the foot, a physical process, hasn't any intention to touch the ground. Even though it hasn't any intention, when you drop it down it touches the ground. So before touching you need not note intention because there's no intention before the touching sensation. So intending, dropping; touching; then intending, dropping; then touching; then intending, pressing. Again your mind goes to the other foot and notes intending, lifting; intending, raising; intending, pushing forward; intending, dropping; touching; intending, pressing, and so on.

As to the awareness of the movement of the foot, the commentary to the Pali text mentions how a meditator experiences or realises

the movement of the foot through his personal or direct experience when he is practising walking meditation. But I need not explain to you how the commentary mentions it because later on you will know yourself through your experience.

You should be careful not to look round here and there while you are walking. Once you look round the mind goes with your eye. Then your concentration is broken. If the mind doesn't stay with the movement of the foot, concentration is broken. So you have to control your mind. And also before you practise walking you should determine that, `I won't look round here and there while I'm practising walking meditation. Though I may have a tendency or desire to look round I will note that desire or tendency until it has disappeared. After the desire or tendency has disappeared you won't look round. Then your concentration won't be broken since the mind will stay with the foot. So you should be careful to control your eyes. You must not look at the foot. If you do you feel tense on your neck or on your back because your head has to bend too much. So you have to keep your eyes looking at a place about four or five feet ahead of you. During walking meditation if your mind goes out you should note: going out going out, or wandering wandering. If you think about anything else then you note, thinking thinking, and so on. Whatever thought arises must be noted during your walking meditation. After the thought has disappeared you return to the primary object of noting: intending, lifting; intending, raising, intending, pushing; intending, dropping; touching; intending, pressing, and so on.

What I have now explain to you is how you can be aware of all the movements of the foot so that you can realise them in their true nature. But for the beginner you need not note all these six points or twelve objects of meditation. For beginners that's enough to note four or five objects. Say: intending, lifting, moving, dropping, touching. But your noting gradually increases.

First of all note left and right about ten minutes, then leave the two objects of lifting and dropping and go to noting of the three objects. Say, lifting moving dropping; lifting pushing dropping; about ten minutes. Then note intending, lifting, pushing, dropping; intending, lifting, pushing, dropping until the end of all your walking meditation. Then what is the result of the awareness of the movement of the foot? If you strive your best you will note it through your direct experience of the movement of the foot. Here because you do not get yet accustomed to concentrate the movement of the foot, sometimes you may feel headache or dizzy. Then you should stand still and note dizziness: dizzy dizzy dizzy, or headache headache, and so on. And if that feeling of dizziness has disappeared resume your walking and note as usual intending lifting pushing dropping and touching and so on. But wherever you go you must be aware of your step when you go to your room, when you go to the dining room, when you come from your room, when you come from the dining room. You must be aware of your step. At least left right, left right. If it is possible, lifting, pushing, dropping. You must not go anywhere unmindfully because this meditation needs continuity of mindfulness for the whole day so that your concentration becomes deeper and deeper, through which the insight knowledge or realisation of mental and physical processes arises. So you mustn't walk fast while you are in retreat. Wherever you go you must walk slowly and be mindful of your step very attentively.

But for Westerners it's difficult to sit cross legged position systematically because they are not accustomed to sitting on the floor. They usually sit on chairs so they find it difficult to sit in a cross legged position on the floor comfortably. That's why they have to use a cushion or something like that. So for Westerners the mode of sitting mentioned by the Omniscient Buddha in the discourse is not good for their comfortable and diligent mindfulness and deep concentration. But if they try to sit in that cross legged position, gradually they can become accustomed to it and they can do it very well. Some of the meditators sit on their cushion and they bend their legs in a somewhat cross legged position. It's good for them to focus their mind on the abdominal movement because if they sit on the cushion they can keep their body in an upright position. The body rarely bends when they sit say for some ten or twenty minutes, because of their cushion.

But when they get painful sensations then unconsciously or consciously they change their position. When they change their position some of them sit with their knees upright. It's very awkward for them and also not suitable for practice of the Dhamma. They should not sit in a position with their knees keeping upright because it doesn't help them to concentrate their mind well on the object of meditation. It's not systematic sitting.

Another aspect of the practice is that when you feel a painful sensation to be unbearable you have a tendency to change position. You should be patient with the pain and note it as much as possible attentively and methodically, not to change instantly but you should proceed with mindfulness of the pain. Eventually if the painful sensation becomes unbearable you can change only once in a sitting. But for some who can sit an hour without changing position it is not good to change the position in a sitting. Such yogis should not change their position. If the pain becomes unbearable then you should get up and practice walking meditation. That's better because when you have a change in the position then your concentration has been broken. Even though you continue to sit after changing your position you can't get deep concentration. So it's not very beneficial for you to change your position if you can sit an hour without changing it.

And in walking too, you should not walk only at ten minutes or fifteen minutes, for a short time. You should walk at least an hour if you can walk without any disturbance to your bodily processes. Only after that you should sit again for meditation. The most important point in walking is not to look round here and there. Naturally you have a tendency or desire to look round when you hear the sound of someone's voice, when you feel something is happening nearby or someone is coming towards you, and so on. But whenever you have a desire or tendency to look round, you should make a mental note of that desire or tendency as: desire, desire, desire, tendency, tendency, and so on. When that desire has disappeared you won't look round and you can resume your walking. Your concentration is still stable to a certain extent. It's not broken.

Yesterday I explained to you how a meditator can observe twelve parts of a step, including intention before every action as mentioned in the Commentary to the Pali text. But it depends on you how many of the actions you should note. You should watch some objects as comfortably as you feel. If you have to exert or endeavour your utmost to be aware of any number of objects uncomfortably, you should not do that. If you do that you feel tense on your neck or your back, and sometimes you feel a headache. Sometimes you feel dizzy because you have to strain too much to be aware of each part of the step. So it depends on you; you yourself know. Normally for a meditator it should be adequate to note four or five objects of a step comfortably without strains with your relaxation: intending, lifting, moving, dropping, or touching. If you are able to observe these four or five objects precisely and very attentively then you can attain a deep concentration on the movement of the foot.

To be aware of these four or five objects very precisely and attentively you have to slow down your stepping. Unless your step is slow you cannot catch each individual part of the step very well. It's indispensable for you to slow down your step so that you can note all these four or five objects very precisely and attentively. Now when you are able to note all these four objects very well, your concentration gradually becomes better and better. You can note intention very concentratedly. Then the lifting movement you can note with diligent mindfulness. Then the pushing movement and putting movement and touching sensation you can know very well without looking here and there. In this way when you practice walking meditation for about three or four days you can attain a deep concentration.

And as to walking meditation the Buddha said there are five benefits of walking. (1) The first benefit is that you can walk on foot a very long journey, because you have practised walking.

(2) Then the second benefit is you will be perseverant with the strenuous effort in your practice. Because you see, it's the nature of a human being to stay still and sit idly, enjoying something. He doesn't want to walk or stand. He likes sitting better than straining and walking. In other words he is naturally lazy to walk so he would like to sit always. So if a person trained himself in walking for a very long time then because of his exertion he likes to walk. He is not reluctant to walk. That means he has the energy or effort to do something actively with alertness. Walking makes him active and alert. So whatever he does he puts the utmost effort in the doing of that thing. That's why the Buddha said, if you practise walking you become industrious, perseverant, with utmost effort.

(3) You yourself know when you are afraid of cholesterol in your body you do jogging every morning or every evening. Jogging is a sort of walking practise. When the time comes up you are not lazy to do jogging. That's because you have practised that jogging. That's what the Buddha said. One of the benefits of walking is the perseverant and diligent effort one can have.

(4) Then the fourth benefit of walking is healthiness. If a person practises walking he is healthier than the person who is lazy. By practising walking you can be healthy both mentally and physically. Mental health is much more important than physical health. Regarding healthiness, the Buddha said the food you have taken is easily digested. Because of the digestion you are healthy. That's the benefit of walking. After you have taken a lot of food into your stomach, if you lie down or if you sit it's somewhat difficult for you to digest it. After you have taken that much food, then if you walk the food is easily digested. So healthiness together with digestion is one of the benefits of walking.

If you are lazy you can't meditate. If you are lazy you do not come here for meditation. Because you are not lazy you come here to meditate. Yesterday when I explained how to practise walking meditation systematically, after the talk most of the yogis took an interest in walking and they practised it. Then at the time of the interview they told me, `I enjoy it.` Why do you enjoy it? Because you like to be industrious and to be perseverant as the result of walking meditation.

The most important benefit of walking, what the Buddha said in accordance with this discourse, is concentration. The Buddha said the concentration you have attained in walking meditation lasts very long. You can easily concentrate your mind on the movement of the foot in a short time when you take an interest in walking, and also do it strenuously, because in walking the object of meditation is more pronounced than in sitting.

In sitting the respiration or abdominal movement is not distinct to your mind. In the beginning of sitting you may find it and you may be able to note it very well: rising, falling, rising, falling. Sometimes it becomes irregular because you make too much effort in your noting of the abdominal movement so that it can be more distinct. But in walking you didn't have such a problem. In walking naturally the lifting movement, pushing movement, dropping movement of the foot is very prominent, very distinct to your mind so that you can easily note it.

When the object of meditation is prominent or predominant then you can easily note it. You can easily watch it. Because you can easily watch it your mind becomes very quickly concentrated on it. Then that concentration becomes also deep so it will last very long. One of the benefits of walking is to attain a long lasting concentration of the mind. Naturally some of you practise walking meditation systematically and diligently so you have had some concentration of the mind which is somewhat deep, better than you have had in sitting meditation. You know it through your experience.

That's what the Buddha said, you can attain long lasting concentration by means of walking. So when you are aware of each individual movement of the foot, and sometimes the intention too, then the mind becomes gradually concentrated on the movement of the foot very well. And the more energetically you note the movement the more deep is the concentration of the mind. Then when concentration becomes deeper and deeper you feel your feet become light as they automatically lift, automatically push forward, automatically drop down. You come to realise it. Sometimes you get startled at the experience of this automatic lifting and pushing and dropping of the foot. and as soon as you feel it you say to yourself, `Hah, what's that? Am I mad or not?` In this way you get startled at the unusual experience of the movement of the foot.

When I conducted a meditation retreat in England at the Manjusri Tibetan Monastery, the Manjusri Institute in northern England near the border of Scotland, one of the meditators had put much effort into his practise both sitting as well as walking, and awareness of the activities too. So after about four days` meditation he came to me and asked a question. `Venerable Sir, my meditation is getting worse and worse,` he said. `Now what happen to your meditation?` I asked him. Then he said, `When I am walking one day, Venerable Sir, then gradually I am not aware of myself. The foot itself had lifted, and it itself pushed forward, and then dropped down by itself. There's no I or no me, no self, no myself. Sometimes though I control my foot, the foot doesn't stay with the ground. It lifted by itself. Sometimes it pushed forward very long. I couldn't control it. Then sometimes it's getting down by itself. So my meditation is getting worse and worse. What should I do?` Then eventually he said, `I think I have gone mad.` Such an experience was very amazing.

This is a benefit of walking meditation. First of all he said, `I don't know myself. I'm not aware of myself. I don't know my body, my leg.` That means the realisation of the movement of the foot. The movement of the foot has destroyed the idea of an `I` or a `you,` a `self` or a `soul,` a `person` or `being.' Here what he was realising was the impersonal nature of our bodily process called Anatta. No soul, non-ego, non-self nature of our bodily phenomena.

When he said, `The foot is automatically lifted up by itself. It's automatically pushed forward by itself,` that means there's no person or no being, no self who lifted the foot, who pushed it forward, who dropped it down. It's the realisation of the impermanent nature of physical processes or physical phenomena: Anatta. Before he didn't realise the physical process of the rising-falling movement and the other parts of the body in sitting, he realised the processes of rising, lifting movement, pushing movement, the falling movement of the phenomena as it really is. So he has destroyed the false idea of an I or a you, a person or a being, a self or a soul. Anatta.

It was very interesting. Not only this yogi but also many yogis in Burma experienced it in this way. And sometimes before you experience this stage of insight knowledge you feel you are walking on waves of the sea. Or you are standing on a boat which was floating on the waves of the sea. Sometimes you may feel you are walking on a heap of cotton. Sometimes you feel you are walking in the air. That is also one of the insight knowledge which penetrates into the true nature of material process, material phenomena.

In accordance with the Buddha's philosophy this so-called person is composed of six elements: the four material elements and the one mental element. Of the four physical, material elements the first one is the element of hardness and softness. We call it pathavi-dhatu. The second is the element of fluidity and coalition. We call it apo-dhatu in Pali. The third is the element of heat and cold, temperature. We call it tejo-dhatu . The fourth is the element of motion, movement, vibration, expansion and contraction. This is called vayo-dhatu in Pali.

These four primary material elements constitute the so-called bodily process. When you feel your body then you may have a sensation of hardness or softness. That is pathavi-dhatu. You may feel heat or cold. That's tejo-dhatu. You feel the nature of fluidity or coalition. That's apo-dhatu. You may feel motion, movement, vibration, supporting. This is vayo-dhatu, one element.

These four primary elements together with the other minor elements are composed as a material unit called the indestructible unit - Kalapa. These eight elements cannot be divided, cannot be destroyed even with the atomic bomb. You can divide the atom into say nucleus and proton and neutron and so on. But the tiniest detail of the atom consists of these four primary elements. So you can't divide it. You can't destroy it so it is called the unit of indestructibility - Avinibhoga-rupa in Pali. So when the innumerable number of these material units are composed then they become a body: a finger, a nail, a hair, and so on.

So, in between these units there's a space. That space is known as akasa-dhatu,. This is one of the six elements which constitutes the so-called bodily process.

Then the sixth one is the mental element. That is, mind, consciousness, mental processes, emotional processes. All these are called vinyana-dhatu, the mental element or mind element.

Normally we are not able to penetrate into these elements and realise them in their true nature. That's why we take these compounded elements for a personal being, an I or a you, because we can't divide. Our intellectual knowledge is not enough to penetrate into these elements, and realise them in their true nature. So we think this is a body, this is a mind, this a man, this is a woman, this is a leg, this is a nose, this a hair. If we have penetrating insight knowledge through our vipassana meditation, insight meditation, then we can penetrate into these primary elements and know them and their nature and also their appearance and disappearance, and the nature of transitoriness of these elements.

So here when you practise walking meditation you feel that you are walking on a boat which is floating on the waves of the sea, or as though you were walking on the air, or as though you are walking on a heap of cotton. You are realising the specific nature or specific characteristic of the wind element vayo-dhatu. Vayo-dhatu, the wind element has movement, motion, supporting, vibrating as its specific characteristics, or individual characteristics.

Normally we do not realise it. But when we watch the movement of the foot while we are walking very closely, attentively and precisely, then our concentration becomes deeper and deeper. Then, because of deep concentration the insight knowledge or experiential knowing becomes penetrating and sharp. So that penetrating insight realises the process of movement and its specific characteristics of movement, motion, vibrating and supporting. So we feel we are walking on the air, or we are standing on the boat, or on the waves of the sea. Because the waves of the sea are always moving.

Then, gradually our concentration becomes deeper. You will feel the specific characteristics of the wind element in that way. At that time you very often feel you are not yourself. Here `you are not yourself` means you are not mad. You are not aware of your body. You are not aware of yourself. What you are here realising is just movement. A great deal of movement which is going on of its own accord. So in this way you have destroyed the idea of a personal being, a self or a soul by means of the walking meditation.

But here you should be careful not to expect any unusual experiences when you are walking. When you expect anything, the expectation disturbs your concentration. Then the concentration becomes weak. Then you can't experience anything new. So you mustn't expect anything. But what I have explained to you is that your noting of the movement of the foot has such and such a benefit you can experience.

So what you should do is just be mindful of what is happening to your body and mind, that's all. Except for mindfulness you mustn't do anything else. You mustn't expect anything, you mustn't be curious or inquisitive about anything. But what you should do is be mindful of what's happening. If you have expectation, that expectation must be aware of expecting. If you have curiosity, curiosity must be aware of curiosity, and so on until it has disappeared. You mustn't allow them to disturb your concentration and mindfulness. So what you should do is just be mindful while you are walking, while you are sitting, while you are lined up, while you are eating, while you are dressing, while you are showering, whatever you are doing. What you should do is just be mindful of it as it is, that's all.

In the time of the Buddha one of the lay bikkhuni. Bikkhuni is a woman monk She was ordained as the bikkhus are done. That bikkhuni's name was Patajara. She's very famous. This Patajara was the daughter of a wealthy person. Say a billionaire, not a millionaire. But when she was grown up she married a servant, so she had to go to the other village and stay there because she was afraid of their parents. Then she had a great deal of trouble because she was a human being. Human beings are surrounded by many sufferings, dukkha. Her husband died. Her two sons and her parents also died. Her half brothers died. The house of Patajara collapsed in a storm due to the heavy rain. So she was mad because of her anxiety, sorrow, worry, lamentation, and despair and she roamed in the city.

But one day the Buddha summoned her to the audience in the monastery of Jetavana who listened to the Buddha's sermon. The Omniscient Buddha knew that she was Patajara and also that her mental faculties were ripe for the attainment of enlightenment. So the Buddha said to her, `Oh beloved sister, please be careful, please come round.` When she heard what the Buddha said she came round. Her mind became normal. Then the Omniscient Buddha told her to sit and listen to the sermon.

While she was listening to Dhamma the Buddha explained to the audience the Four Noble Truths. The first is the truth of suffering, Dukkha. The second is the Truth of the Cause of Suffering, Samudaya . The third is the truth of the Cessation of Suffering, Nirodha. Then the fourth is the Truth of the Way Leading to the Cessation of Suffering. That is Mindfulness and Meditation. When the Buddha explained the truth of the way leading to the cessation of suffering, and how to practise mindfulness and meditation - when anyone wants to get rid of all kinds of suffering - then Patajara with a great deal of suffering wanted to get rid of it.

So while listening to Dhamma she tried to be mindful of what is happening to her body and mind, and also consciousness, the hearing. In this way she gradually concentrated her mind very well. And when she had attained a deep concentration her insight knowledge became penetrating and realised all mental and physical phenomena in their true nature. And eventually she attained the four stages of enlightenment which completely uprooted all mental defilements together with their potentialities. Then she lived happily and peacefully without any suffering, stress or worries, sorrows and lamentation. She became free from all kinds of mental and physical suffering.

But what I should tell you is this woman attained the first stage of enlightenment while she was listening to Dhamma and after that she asked the Buddha for ordination as a Bikkhuni. So the Buddha told the other Bikkhunis to ordain her. After he ordained her as a Bikkhuni she proceeded with her practise of mindfulness and meditation.

And one day at night she practised walking meditation the whole night. Then because of her walking meditation her concentration became deeper and deeper and also stable and firm. When she had realised the viability of her concentration she went to her room and sat for meditation. When she approached her bed she noted all activities: her standing, standing, and bending bending , then turning, turning, when you sit down on the bed, sitting down, sitting down. Then after she had settled herself on the seat she took a small stick and stretching her arm, reached her arm to the lamp which was flaming. Then with that stick she noticed stretching, stretching. She then pressed the flame with the stick, pressing, pressing, pressing. Then the flame submerged into the oil and it was extinguished. As soon as the flame had submerged into the oil she attained three other higher stages of enlightenment, and all defilement was destroyed by this enlightenment. She became Arahant and lived in peace and happiness. Here, because of deep concentration she attained from walking meditation, she could be aware of all daily activities, and that awareness made her attain to the other higher stages of enlightenment which totally destroy all defilements.

So what I mean is that in systematic sitting for meditation you mustn't move even the hands. You should sit like a statue so that your concentration doesn't break but becomes deep and stable. When you move your hand from one place to another then the mind goes with the hand and concentration breaks. So you mustn't move the hand. So when you sit for meditation please be careful. You must remind yourself of this statue. [Say to yourself]: I must sit like a statue of the Buddha, here.

Unconsciously you moved your hand. But even when we say it's an unconscious movement, actually your mind goes with the hand. Without intention to move, you don't move. Because you have intention to move, you do move. That one thing - wishing, intention - is mental process. The concentration of the mind is also mental process. And when you move your hand then your mind goes with the hand and concentration breaks. So please be careful not to move even your hands from one place to another.

Then in walking meditation the most important thing is not to look round here and there. Once you look round, then the mind goes with the eye and concentration breaks. You have to control your eyes not to look round. The best way to control your eyes is noting the desire to look round. Without desire or tendencies you won't look round here and there. Because of the desire to look round you do it. So that desire or tendency must be noted until it has disappeared. When the desire has disappeared, you won't look round. So please be careful to watch the desire to look round. If the desire is watched and if the desire's stopped you won't look round and your concentration doesn't break.

In walking meditation yesterday I explained to you how you experienced the movement of the foot when your concentration's good enough. But here what I want to tell you is there are two levels of understanding, right understanding of the physical process and mental process.

First of all, what you should know is that there are five mental faculties a yogi must be possessed of. The first one is saddha.

Saddha is Pali; sradha is Sanskrit. It means faith or confidence of belief. Here faith is not blind faith. It is faith through right understanding of the truth. Because you have some knowledge of the truth then you believe in it. That belief is known as saddha, faith.

So faith through right understanding is one of the mental faculties a yogi must possess. Without faith or belief in the Dhamma or the truth you do not follow it, you do not practise it. Because you have some degree of faith or belief in the truth, you follow it, you practise it. So faith or confidence of belief in the Dhamma is a very important mental factor to enable a meditator to practise systematic meditation strenuously. Without firm or strong faith in Dhamma or the truth you won't practise any Dhamma.

The second one is viriya, in Pali. Viriya is effort or energy. When you believe in any Dhamma you make enough effort to practise it or follow it. So faith or belief or confidence is the cause, strenuous effort is the effect. When you put enough effort into your practise you will be able to be mindful of each and every activity of your body and mind for the whole day. When you can be mindful of all mental and physical phenomena in nature, then mindfulness becomes continuous, constant and powerful. Then here viriya, effort or energy, is the cause mindfulness is effect.

Mindfulness is called sati. Because of strenuous effort mindfulness becomes continuous, constant and powerful. When sati, mindfulness, becomes constant and powerful then your mind is well concentrated on any mental process or physical process which is observed. Unless mindfulness is continuous and powerful you won't gain any deep concentration. Only when mindfulness becomes continuous and constant and powerful then your concentration becomes better and better, deeper and deeper.

Then concentration is called samadhi in Pali. The Lord Buddha said, `Oh bikkhus, cultivate concentration of the mind. The mind which is concentrated gives rise to realisation of phenomena.` Another word: cultivate the concentration of the mind. One who is well concentrated realises the phenomenon as it really is. That's what the Buddha said. Here the concentration is the cause and realisation or right understanding is effect. Without deep concentration you are not able to realise any phenomena and their true nature as they really are.

So samadhi, concentration, is the cause, realisation or right understanding, pannya, is effect. Pannya is Pali. Here pannya means right understanding of mental and physical phenomena. Pannya is translated into wisdom, insight, enlightenment. So here what we need in this context, pannya means penetrating knowledge, right understanding of body-mind processes. Without deep concentration you are not able to rightly understand any mental or physical phenomena and their true nature. Only if your mind is concentrated to a larger extent, then you are able to rightly understand body-mind processes and their true nature. Here samadhi, concentration, is the cause, pannya, right understanding or penetrating insight, is effect.

When bodily and mental processes are fully realised then you don't have any mental defilements such as greed, desire, craving, attachment, hatred, ill-will, anger, ignorance, jealousy, false view, and so on. These are called mental defilements because when the mind is full of these undesirable mental or emotional states the mind gets defiled. They are called kilesas in Pali, in Sanskrit kelayasas and are translated as mental defilements or mental impurities. So long as you have any of these mental defilements in your mind you are sure to suffer.

Suppose you are angry with someone or with something. That anger is mental defilement. When you get angry your mind gets defiled, and you suffer because of that anger. When you have anger you get suffering. Do you agree with me on this point? Then should you have or should you abandon it? Should you have the anger or should you welcome the anger?

Pali for anger is dosa. But dosa has two aspects, the dosa which is increasing and the dosa which is decreasing. So when you are angry with someone or something your dosa is progressive dosa. And again when you are unhappy or when you are dejected or depressed that state of mind is also called dosa. This dosa is depressive dosa. What I mean is whether you have anger or depression or unhappiness your mind is full of dosa, defilement. Then you are unhappy. You get a great deal of suffering. That's why we called dosa a mental defilement, or mental impurity.

So then we take another mental state, lobha. Lobha is Pali. It has very wide meaning. It means desire, greed, acquiring, lust, attachment. All the senses of these words are covered by that of lobha. So when we want to say lobha we use the word attachment as the equivalent to lobha, because attachment is an English word which covers all the senses of desire, craving, lust, greed, and so on.

When you have lobha you are sure to suffer. Say when you are greedy to be wealthy then you have to do many works to earn a great deal of money and you get a great deal of dukkha suffering. That lobha, greed, is the cause of suffering. If you are attached to your wealth you would have a great deal of suffering. Because when you are attached to your wealth you try to maintain it, or you try to make it double. Then that attachment to your wealth is because of suffering, dukkha. If you are attached to your wealth you'll protect yourself from thieves, or robbery, undesirable relatives, especially sons and daughters. Then you have dukkha, suffering. The cause of suffering or dukkha is attachment. Lobha. Even if you are attached to your good experiences and meditation it's dukkha.

Meditation is the thing which you should experience, not the thing which you are attached to. If you are attached to your good experiences you had yesterday, today if your concentration is poor you get restless because you want to re-experience those good things you had yesterday. The more effort you put in and your noting, then the more distractions you have, and the more restless you become. Then the more suffering, the more dukkha you have. That is not because of meditational experience but because of attachment to it. That's why the Buddha said attachment is samodhyasacca. Samodhya is the cause or the origin, sacca is the truth. Samodhyasacca means the truth of the cause of suffering. So attachment is the cause of suffering.

This lobha, attachment, is also one of the mental defilements which is because of suffering, dukkha. Then should you be attached to anyone or anything? If you are attached to anyone or anything, what would happen to you? Yes, you would be surrounded by a great deal of suffering. When you are attached to your beloved friend, then when he gets into any trouble you feel sorry and unhappy. That sorrow and unhappiness, is it desirable or undesirable. Then it's dukkha, yes. Where does the dukkha comes from? It comes from attachment to your friend.

Then if you are attached to your son or daughter or parent then you have more dukkha. The result of the attachment is dukkha. So whatever you are attached to or whoever you are attached to, it's sure you suffer, you have dukkha. Then should you have the attachment or shouldn't you have attachment? No. Yes, why? Because you are afraid of dukkha. Everyone, including me, is afraid of dukkha.

Then if we are afraid of dukkha what should we do? We should destroy the cause of dukkha, the attachment. If we are able to destroy attachment, the cause of dukkha, suffering, then there won’t arise any dukkha at all. Then we are free from dukkha. The attachment is a mental defilement which must be destroyed by one who wants to get free from all kinds of dukkha. When the attachment has been completely destroyed you won't have any dukkha at all.

Say all of you are working at home or at the office or at the company or any place. Though you come here to meditate sometimes your mind goes back to work. Why? Because you are attached to it. When you have less attachment to the work you have less dukkha.

When you have a great attachment to your work you have a great deal of dukkha even though you are meditating. So attachment is the cause of suffering. The Buddha said it is the second truth, the truth of the cause of suffering, dukkha.

You know there are the Four Noble Truths. The first truth is the Noble Truth of Suffering, dukkha. The second is the Noble Truth of the Cause of Suffering, dukkha, attachment. The third is the Truth of the Cessation of Dukkha, suffering.

Do you want to destroy dukkha or not? When you have dukkha you're suffering. You are afraid of suffering so you want to destroy dukkha. If you want to exterminate this dukkha what should you do? You have to eradicate the attachment. You have to uproot attachment, the cause of dukkha. When attachment has been destroyed then your dukkha, suffering ceases to exist. Then you have attained the state of the cessation of suffering. This State of Cessation of Suffering is called Nibbana. This is the Third Truth, the Truth of the Cessation of Suffering.

Then the fourth one is the Truth of the Way leading to the Cessation of Suffering. That means if you follow this Way then you'll be able to destroy all kinds of mental defilement and there won't arise any dukkha at all. The Truth of the Way leading to the Cessation of Suffering is called Magga-sacca, in Pali. The third one is called Nirodha-sacca, the truth of the cessation of suffering.

Have you heard of the way leading to the cessation of suffering? The Noble Eight-fold Path. You may not have some knowledge of this Noble Eight-fold Path theoretically, but practically you have it. This noting of your bodily-mental process comprises the Noble Eight-fold Path. When you know rising, falling, rising, falling. When you watch, pain, pain. When you are aware of the movement of the foot, lifting, pushing, dropping, touching, and so on. When you are aware of a bending movement, stretching of the arms, sitting down and rising from the seat. All this awareness or mindfulness or noting consists of the Noble Eight-

So this is the way you are following which leads you to the cessation of suffering. This is the fourth truth. And when you note the lifting movement, pushing movement, dropping movement, touching sensation of the foot, then you have to make a mental effort to be aware of the movement. That mental effort or energy is one of the eight mental factors of the noble path. It's called Right Effort, or Right Energy. Samma-vayama.

Because of that right effort you are aware of the lifting movement, pushing movement, dropping movement of the foot. That awareness is sammasati. Right Mindfulness. When you are aware of the movement of the foot precisely and attentively your mind is concentrated on the movement momentarily. That concentration is known as samma samadhi, Right Concentration. Why is it right? Because it causes the right insight, penetrating insight, to arise. Or because it's the cause of realisation of the mental and physical phenomena and their true nature, and eradication of all mental defilements. So that samadhi, is samma-samadhi, right concentration.

Though you put enough effort in the practise, in the noting, or in awareness, the mind doesn't stay with the object always. Sometimes the mind goes out, wanders. Then one of the mental factors which arises together with mindfulness directs the mind to the object of meditation, to the movement of the foot. That mental factor is called Right Thought, samma-sankhappa.

In this way, whenever you observe the movement of the foot these four mental factors are working on the movement and gradually right concentration becomes deeper and deeper. Then you come to realise the movement of the foot without conscious awareness of your bodily form or yourself. When you are realising these movements very clearly you are not aware of yourself, your body. What you are realising at that moment is just movement. Then with the deeper concentration you come to the higher state of insight which penetrates into the movement and realises its rising and passing away.

When you note the lifting movement then you know you come to realise a series of many broken movements one after another, arising and passing away. Before you come to realise this state you think the movement is only one and the same. Before that you think, my foot, I lifted, I am pushing it forward, I dropped it down. There you have I or me. You think, who does lifting, pushing, dropping, and so on. But when you are able to realise a series of broken movements rising and passing away one after another, then you don’t have that idea of I or you, myself or a person, a being.

What you are understanding is a series of broken movements which are arising and passing away in an ever-changing process. Then that realisation or that right understanding destroys the false idea of an I or a you, a person, a being, which is the seat of all kinds of mental defilement. When you have done with this false idea of a person there won't arise any defilement because mental defilements arise depending on this false idea of a person, a being, a self or a soul. When that idea has been exterminated you won't have any mental defilement, because its seat has been destroyed. Then when you do not have mental defilements there won't arise any suffering at all.

So you have attained the cessation of suffering by way of cultivating the Noble Eight-fold Path by being aware of the movement of your foot. If you are able to realise, `this is not me, this is not my foot, this is just a natural process of movement which is rising and passing away,` that understanding is Right Understanding, samma-ditthi, one of the eight mental factors of the Noble Path.

Then here you have developed the five mental factors. The first one is mental effort, Right Effort, samma-vayama. The second is awareness or mindfulness, Right Mindfulness, samma-sati, The third is samadhi, Right Concentration. The fourth is samma-sankhappa, Right Thought. The fifth is Right Understanding, sammaditthi. Here samma ditthi, Right Understanding is the most important factor because it penetrates into the true nature of body-mind processes and their true nature, as they really are.

So you have cultivated five mental factors of the Noble Path. The Noble Path consists of eight factors. The other three are samma-vaca, Right Speech, samma-kammanta, Right Deed, and samma ajiva, Right Livelihood. Right Speech here means abstention from unwholesome or immoral speech. That's samma-vaca. Samma-Kammanta means abstention from unwholesome or immoral deeds or actions. Samma-ajiva means abstention from unwholesome livelihoods.

When you are meditating and concentrating your mind very well on the object of meditation, the movement of the foot, do you abstain from bad speech or right speech? You are abstaining from immoral speech. Then you have samma vaca, Right Speech. And also abstaining from immoral deeds or actions. Then you have samma kammanda, Right Deed. Then when you are meditating having this Right Understanding do you take what's not given by the owner? Then are you killing some living being? No. And you are not smuggling goods? So abstention from bad livelihood.

These three - samma-vaca, samma-kammanta, samma-ajiva - Right Speech, Right Deed, Right Livelihood - are connected with moral conduct, precepts. When you fully observe the precepts you have these three. So when you note or are mindful of the movement of the foot how many mental factors you have? Eight. This eight is the Noble Eight-fold Path. When you have fully developed this Noble Eight-fold Path you are sure to destroy those mental defilements which are the causes of suffering beginning with attachment. Then you are free from all kinds of suffering.

First of all I would like to explain how you can make powerful and strong the five mental faculties. The first is saddha, faith. The second is viriya, effort or energy. The third is mindfulness. The fourth is concentration. The fifth is right understanding, pannya. Because I wanted to explain to you how you can develop right understanding my talk went astray.

Please remember these five mental factors are very important for the yogi because he must be endowed with all of them. The first, saddha, faith; the second, viriya, effort or energy; the third, sati, mindfulness; the fourth, samadhi, concentration; the fifth, pannya, right understanding. You have all of these five but sometimes it's weak. Sometimes it's strong. So you have to make it strong all the time. May all of you have these five mental factors stronger and stronger and achieve your goal.

And to attain the continuity of mindfulness for the whole day you have to not only practise sitting meditation and walking meditation, but also awareness of our daily activities. Because aside from the times for sitting and walking there are times when you are doing your daily activities such as washing or showering, taking meals, drinking, and laundering, and also preparing your bed at bed time. So if you apply this mindfulness only to sitting and working, if you do not apply it to the other general activities of the day, then your mindfulness is not continuous and constant. It doesn't become powerful and sharp and diligent.

Mindfulness becomes continuous, constant and uninterrupted only when you make proper effort and awareness of your daily activities, and it becomes sharp. Only when mindfulness becomes continuous and constant does your mind become well concentrated on any mental or physical object which is observed. That concentration gives rise to right understanding or insight knowledge which penetrates into the true nature of mental and physical phenomena. That's why it's indispensable for a meditator to put a reasonable effort into awareness of daily activities, as much as possible.

To be aware of your general activities of the day you have to slow down all actions and movements, all activities. Then you can be aware of almost all daily activities in more and more detail. Though you do these general activities of the day normally, in a normal pace, you can be aware of them but not in detail. But you can do it generally. General awareness is not so much powerful. It doesn't make your mindfulness continuous and constant, uninterrupted.

So meditators need to have detailed mindfulness of daily activities as much as possible, slowing down actions and movement as much as possible. Only then does mindfulness become continuous and constant and gives rise to deep concentration of the mind which is the cause of right understanding. That is why the Lord Buddha dealt with a separate chapter on awareness of daily activities in his discourse of the four foundations of mindfulness, the Mahasatipatthana sutra.

Without awareness of daily activities you can't concentrate your mind very well or deeply. When concentration's not deep enough there won't arise any insight knowledge or experiencing knowledge which penetrates into the intrinsic nature of mental and physical phenomena. That's why we should try to be aware of more daily activities in more detail day by day.

So when you are successful in noting all these activities of the day in more and more detail, the mindfulness becomes constant and powerful, and concentration becomes deeper and deeper. Then pannya or wisdom or right understanding or insight knowledge becomes penetrating and realises body-mind processes and two levels of understanding. Here those meditators who have obtained deep concentration realise the bodily processes of nama and rupa, mentality and mind, and two levels of understanding.

The first one is understanding of the specific or individual characteristics of mental and physical phenomena. The second one is understanding of general or common characteristics of mental and physical phenomena.

When you have understood the specific characteristics of mental and physical phenomena then you can exterminate the false idea of a person, a being, an I or a you, a self or a soul, which is the seat of all mental defilements and hindrances. Then what are the specific characteristics of mental and physical phenomena; what are the individual characteristics of mental and physical phenomena? As to mental phenomena, when you note rising, falling of the abdomen; or lifting, pushing, dropping of the foot; or bending of the arms, stretching of the arms, then there's a mental process that knows the object, rising, falling movement, lifting, pushing, dropping movement, bending, stretching movement of the arm.

The phenomenon which knows the object is called chitta. Chitta is sometimes translated into consciousness but in other times into mind. Whether it's translated into consciousness or mind its characteristic is cognising the characteristic instead of cognising the object or perceiving the object. So, cognising or perceiving of the object is the individual characteristic of chitta or consciousness or mind. When you note rising, falling, rising, falling; or sitting, touching, sitting, touching; when your mindfulness becomes sharp and concentration becomes deep, then you come to distinguish between the object and the subject. The object is the rising and falling movement; the subject is the mind that notes it or cognises it or knows it or perceives it. You can differentiate between the object physical process and the subject mental process that knows it.

When concentration becomes deeper what you are realising is this dual process of mental and physical phenomena. Then you come to rightly understand that the rising movement is one process, the mind that knows it is the other process. There are two processes which are arising at the same moment. The falling movement is one process; the mind that cognises it is the other process. Then again you come to realise the rising movement hasn't any power to know any object. The same with the falling movement. Falling movement hasn't any ability to know or to perceive any object. But the mind that knows it has the ability of perceiving the object, of cognising the object. In this way you come to differentiate between nama and rupa, mental phenomena and physical phenomena.

Then here you come to know that so-called opposing is composed of physical processes and mental processes. So-called opposing is nothing but natural processes of mental and physical phenomena. When you have rightly understood in this way you don't have in your mind the false idea of opposing being, an I or a you, a self or a soul, because what you are realising is the dual process of mental and physical phenomena.

There, when you come to realise the noting mind is able to perceive the object or cognise the object, rising movement or falling; or lifting movement, pushing movement and dropping movement. But physical process hasn't any ability to perceive or to cognise anything. This understanding is that of specific or individual characteristics of the mind or the consciousness by rightly understanding the mind and its characteristics and also the physical process and its characteristics. Then you have destroyed the idea of a person, a being, an I or a you. That means when distinguishing physical processes from that of mind or mentality you don't identify mental processes, that's noting mind with yourself or your person. Then you have no idea of a person, a being, a self or a soul.

In the same way you do not identify physical processes, that's a rising and falling movement of the abdomen, with yourself or your person. You know separately mental process is one thing, physical process that the mind notes is the other. Neither mental process is a person or being. A physical process is also not a being, a person, a self or a soul. In this way you come to destroy the false idea of a person, a being, a self or a soul. It's called sakkaya-ditthi, atta-ditthi.

Sakkaya-ditthi, atta-ditthi, the false idea of a self, a soul, a person or being is the seat of all mental defilements such as desire, grieving, greed, lust, hatred, anger, ill-will, ignorance, conceit, jealousy, and so on. All these mental defilements arise dependent on the idea of a person, a being, a self or a soul. This false idea of a person, a being, a self or a soul, sakkaya- ditthi, atta-ditthi, is the seat of all mental defilements which are the causes of suffering, dukkha.

When you consider these mental and physical processes theoretically, you can have some knowledge of mental and physical processes which are neither a person nor a being, neither a self nor a soul. So when you are able to watch the rising and falling movement or lifting movement, pushing and dropping movement of the foot, or bending of the arm or stretching of the arm, you are able to know clearly or perceive there's a rising movement of the

So the mind that knows these objects, when you can differentiate between the rising and falling movement and the mind that knows it you can answer if someone asks you whether the mind that knows is a person or the process of a rising and falling movement, a person or being. That question can be very easily answered by you when you differentiate between the rising and falling movement of the abdomen and the mind that notes it.

Shall I put a question to you about this aspect of Dhamma? Which is a person or a being, a self, the rising or falling movement or the mind that notes it? The rising movement is not a person. Then is the falling movement a person or a self? No. Then is the mind that notes it a person or a self or a soul. No. Then what are they? They are natural processes. The rising movement is a natural process of material phenomena. The falling movement is also a natural process of physical phenomena. The mind that notes, knows it, is a natural process of mental phenomena. All these three are natural processes. No part of them is a person, a being or a self.

Then during your contemplation of the rising and falling movement of the abdomen do you find any person or being, self or soul? No. Then, what's the thing you find? A natural process of mentality and physicality. But before we are able to realise this dual process of mentality and physicality we take the mind for a person, a being, an I or a you. I note, I know. Who knows? Who has the ability of perceiving or knowing the object? A person or a self has the ability of knowing or perceiving an object. Is it right? No. Then what has that ability? The mind has the ability of knowing, cognising the object.

Then is the mind a person, a being? No. But before we are able to differentiate between these two processes of mentality and physicality we take the mind to be a person, a being because we take, I know or you know. It applies to a person, but actually there is no person, no being, no self who knows the object. Only the mind has the ability of knowing or cognising the object.

When we clearly see the two processes of mental and physical phenomena in our practise of insight meditation we don't take mental processes to be a person. We don't take physical processes to be a person because we know that the physical is just the natural process of materiality. Mental process is just the natural process of mentality. Neither of them are a person, a being, an I or a you.

To rightly understand this dual process as just the natural processes of mentality and physicality what we need is deep concentration. Unless your mind is well concentrated on any mental or physical object which is observed, you are unable to realise in this way. So deep concentration of mind is required to rightly understand this dual process of mental and physical phenomena and their true nature. Then after entering into deep concentration what should we do? And what do we need? To obtain deep concentration of the mind what do we need? Mindfulness. Sparse mindfulness. Continuous mindfulness. Continuous constant uninterrupted mindfulness is the most important factor to obtain deep concentration and right understanding of phenomena.

If we need continuous and constant mindfulness what should we do? Should we speak to each other or should we lie down and sleep? What should we do? Yes. Note all activities in sitting, in walking, and doing daily activities. These are three aspects of this practise. When you lay stress on only sitting and walking does your mindfulness become continuous or constant? No. Then what should we do to have continuous and constant mindfulness? clearly. Be aware of all actions and movements for the whole day.

That's why the Lord Buddha teaches us in a separate chapter on awareness of all daily activities in the Maha-satipatthana Sutra. It's called sampajanna-papa. Sampajanna means clear comprehension or full awareness. Papa here means the chapter. There the Buddha said, `When you go forward you must be mindful of it, as it is. When you go backward you must be mindful of it as it is.`

Sometimes when you come to the interview room you mindfully come there, you walk left, right or lifting, pushing, dropping. But when you have interview you get up and walk out unmindfully. Is it in conformity to the Buddha's teaching? When you go forward you should be mindful of it. When you go backward you should be mindful of it.

`When you look straight you should be mindful of it. When you look aside you should be mindful of it.` And did you watch when you looked at something? No. That's what Buddha said. When you look at something you note looking, looking, then seeing, seeing. After looking you must note seeing. Why? When you look at something don't you see it? Maybe you're blind. A blind man cannot see even though he looks at something. You see the Buddha said, `When you walk to certain distance you must be as if you are blind. You must be as if you are deaf.` That means a blind man cannot see anything when he walks to a destination. If he cannot see anything, in that case does he have any defilement in his mind as to the visible thing? No, because he doesn't see it.

The Buddha said, `When you walk to a destination you must be like a blind man.` How? When you look at something you note looking, looking, looking, seeing, seeing, seeing, seeing. If you are noting of seeing and looking it is constant and powerful. You can't differentiate the visible thing, whether it's good or bad, pleasant or unpleasant. You don't have any idea of the visible thing which is looked at by you and seen by you. Why? Because of mindfulness. Seeing, seeing, seeing, looking, looking, looking, looking.

The same with hearing. When you hear some sound constantly and persistently note hearing, hearing, hearing, hearing, hearing, hearing. When that noting becomes powerful then you do not know what you are hearing. Or you do not differentiate between pleasantness and unpleasantness of the things which hurt, because of mindfulness. Then you don't have any defilement in your mind. You are like a deaf person or a blind person.

So when you want to be like a blind or deaf person what should you do? Note. Be mindful of what you are hearing and of what you are looking and seeing. Make a mental note as looking, looking, seeing, seeing, hearing, hearing, and so on.

That means at that moment it seems that there are two processes of mentality. One process is the process of seeing. The other process is the process for noting it. And the two processes are arising in the same way, you think. Actually the two minds don't arise at the same moment, but arising and passing away of mentality is so swift and so instant that you cannot differentiate the previous mind and the following mind. They become continuous. So you think at the same moment you have the process of looking and the process of noting it. When the process of looking and seeing becomes powerful the process of noting becomes weak. Then you can see the visible object, that's something, very clearly, and you get the idea of good or bad about this object.

When you take the object to be good then you feel pleasant about it. When you take the object to be bad you feel unpleasant about it. When you feel pleasant about this object then there arises a desire to have it. Desire, then attachment, then craving arises because you take it to be pleasant. And when you take that object to be unpleasant then you get aversion, dosa. Aversion is also defilement. Attachment, desire is also defilement, impurities of mind. Then which is better? Is aversion better or is desire better? Neither is better. Then either of these may be good. Yes, neither is it good. Why are these aversions and desires bad? Because they are dukkha. When you have aversion it is dukkha. When you have desire it is dukkha. When you have attachment it is dukkha. So these defilements are bad, disadvantages.

So if you want to feel sukkha, if you want to live in sukkha or happiness and peace, what you should do is overcome or remove these mental defilements which are dukkha and the causes of dukkha, suffering. That's why the Buddha teaches that when you look at something note looking, looking, seeing, seeing, so that your consciousness of seeing doesn't have time enough to analyse that object. If the consciousness of seeing has time enough to analyse the object then that consciousness will know pleasantness or unpleasantness of the object.

So as not to have enough time to analyse this object, what you should do? Note. Note seeing, seeing, or looking, looking. When a person is walking on the road very steadily then he can reach the destination in a short time. But if someone goes to him and knocks his leg with a stick what would happen to him? He couldn't walk properly and steadily. Sometimes he may fall. Then again he gets up again and walks. Could he reach his destination in a short time? No. In the same way is consciousness here. Looking is like a person who walks to a destination. The noting mind is like a person who knocks or who hits it with a stick. You follow this simile? That's the way.

So when you look at something note looking, looking, looking. When you see it note seeing, seeing, seeing, seeing, seeing constantly and persistently and energetically. When your noting is not energetic then consciousness of seeing becomes powerful and overwhelms this noting. Then that consciousness will think about or analyse that object which is seen and it will come to feel pleasant or unpleasant about the object. When the noting mind notes seeing, seeing, seeing, seeing, looking, looking, looking, the consciousness of seeing doesn't have enough time to think about the object or analyse it because it's weak. Why is it weak? Because of knocking or striking by the noting mind.

So, when you note seeing, seeing, looking, looking, the consciousness of seeing becomes gradually weak because of the noting mind. Then it is not able to analyse the object, think about the object. What he is able to do is just see it, that's all. Just seeing it, that's all. It see the object then it passes away. Then another consciousness arises and sees the object and it passes away. Then another consciousness see it and it passes away.

Then the mind which sees the object does not have any idea of good or bad about the object, or pleasant or unpleasant. It has just neutral feeling. This neutral feeling is also very weak. If you take the object to be bad or unpleasant, the unpleasant feeling will be stronger. Then you'll have aversion or hatred towards this object. When that seeing mind takes the object to be good or pleasant that pleasant feeling will be stronger. Then you would have desire for the object because the pleasant feeling is because of desire or attachment.

You know the law of dependent origination. Attachment or desire arises through pleasant feelings, through feeling or sensation. So when the mind takes the object to be good or pleasant there will arise a desire or attachment. Then when the mind has very weak neutral feeling about the object do you have attachment or aversion? You have neither attachment nor aversion because your neutral feeling about the object is very weak. Then when you don't have any of the mental defilements do you have suffering, dukkha? No. Here suffering ceases regarding this physical object because you rightly know it, rightly understand it, and realise it. Just the one which is seen that's all.

In the same way when you know hearing, hearing. When the noting mind becomes powerful and constant, hearing becomes weak. Then the consciousness of hearing cannot analyse or think about the object. It doesn't take the object to be bad or good, pleasant or unpleasant. Then the consciousness of hearing would have very weak neutral feeling about the object. There won't arise any attachment, desire or aversion, hatred or anger and you won't have any mental defilements. Then you are free from suffering, dukkha as to these audible objects.

ÉÍÍÍ

When we see a visible object the consciousness of seeing arises dependent on the eye - one of the six bases - and the visible object. When your eye has contact with a visible object then there arises a consciousness of seeing. So consciousness of seeing arises dependent on the eye and the visible object. The eye is one of six sense bases. The visible object is one of six objects.

So when you see something you must be aware of it as seeing, seeing, seeing. As long as you see it you must be aware of it, you must note it. When you note the consciousness of seeing, it means you note the eye and visible object too, because when there is no eye and when there is no visible object the consciousness for seeing doesn't arise. Consciousness of seeing arises dependent on both eye and visible object.

So if you observe the consciousness of seeing then it means you observe eyes and visible object too. So whenever you see something you must not watch the thing which is seen. You must not watch the thing with which you see. What you need to observe is seeing, the consciousness for seeing - because when you observe the visible object which is seen then you have to note seeing, seeing, not object, object. When you note seeing, seeing, seeing it's the consciousness for seeing, not the visible object.

Only when you note the consciousness for seeing, the noting mind disturbs the process of seeing. So the process of seeing becomes weak and it doesn't see the object very well. It cannot judge about the object, whether it is pleasant or unpleasant, bad or good. Then you won't have any defilement arising dependent on the consciousness for seeing or the visible object.

So whatever you see you must be aware of by making the mental note seeing, seeing, seeing. Whatever you hear you must be aware of by making the mental note hearing, hearing. Whatever you smell you must observe the consciousness of smelling, making the mental note smelling, smelling. Whatever you taste you must be aware of it, make a mental note tasting, tasting. Whatever you touch you must observe it as touching, touching, touching. Whatever you think about you must be aware of it, make a mental note of it as thinking, thinking, and so on.

When you hear some sound or voice, that is an audible object, that consciousness of hearing arises dependent on the ear and audible objects. When you note smelling, smelling then consciousness for smelling arises dependent on nose and sense odour. When you note tasting, tasting the consciousness for taste arises dependent on the tongue and the food. When you note touching, touching the consciousness for touching arises dependent on the body and a tangible object. When you note thinking, thinking that thought arises dependent on the mind and the dhamma, that is what it to be thought about.

These six sense bases are also called `sense doors.` The term door is used for these three sense bases. Literally it is translated into door. Eye is a sense door, ear is a sense door, nose is a sense door, tongue is a sense door, body is a sense door, and mind is a sense door. The sense door eye is called cakkha-dvara. That means the eye door. cakkhu means the eye, dvara means door. Cakkha-dvara means the eye door. In the same way the ear door, the nose door, the tongue door, the body door, the mind door, and so on.

Why these six sense bases are called doors is because the consciousness comes to your mind through the eye. Sometimes these mental states come to the mind through the ear, sometimes through the nose, sometimes through the tongue, sometimes through the body, sometimes through the mind. So they are called the doors. Here the Lord Buddha said, `Your six sense doors must be closed so that you don't have any mental defilements.` Then do you know how to close the door? By noting of six things, six consciousness of seeing, hearing, smelling, tasting, touching, and thinking about.

This is the point, what the Buddha said. When you see, say, a very beautiful rose you realise the rose is very beautiful. Its scent is very sweet. When you judge like that there arises a pleasant feeling about the rose. When you feel a pleasant feeling what will arise? Attachment, to what? To the rose. To the feeling or to the rose? To the rose. And pleasant feeling, attachment, arises dependent on that feeling. This attachment is to the rose. Then if the flower is not beautiful, is ugly and produces a bad smell, when you see it how do you feel, pleasant or unpleasant? Unpleasant. You'll judge the flower is very ugly, `I don't want to see it.` Then what mental state arises? Aversion. Anger.

When you judge the flower is beautiful and pleasant then you have attachment or desire for it or to it. When you judge the flower is ugly and produces a bad odour then you have aversion or anger depending on the unpleasant feeling. Here you could not close your eye doors so these mental defilements come into the mind. One of the mental defilements comes to your mind through the eye doors. Then when you have defilements is it good or bad? Bad. Yes. Mental defilement is dukkha, suffering, and also the cause of dukkha, suffering.

Then what's the thing with which you have to close these six doors? Noting, yes, mindfulness. Mindfulness is called sati, in Pali. So you must close all these six doors with mindfulness. And do you know how to close them with mindfulness? Yes, noting, being mindful of. That's why the Buddha said, `Whatever you see must be noted or mindful of, as it is. Whatever you hear must be mindful of or noted. Whatever you smell must be observed. Whatever you taste you must be aware of. Whatever you touch must be noted. Whatever you think about must be watched, as it is.`

This is how to close the six doors so that any of the mental defilements cannot come into the mind. If you open the door then these mental defilements are waiting there outside the door to come into the mind. When the mental defilements come into the mind you are lucky or unlucky? Unlucky. Sorrow, worry, anxiety, strain, stress and depression, agony, anguish - a lot of suffering coming into your mind through these six sense doors. So it's very important.

This technique which closes these six doors is called indriya-samatta in Pali. Here indriya means six doors, samatta means their closing or closed. So indriya-samatta is the most important factor in the teaching of the Buddha which enables a person to get free from all kinds of suffering.

Sometimes you practise walking meditation say, and here the place for walking is very narrow, very small. So sometimes when you pass each other you can't help to look askance. Then you feel pleasant or unpleasant, at least disturbed. Your concentration is disturbed by the consciousness for looking or seeing. Then concentration is gone. Then sometimes through that contact of the eye and the visible object, if any desire attachment comes into the mind then you suffer. Or any aversion or anger comes into the mind through those eye doors then you suffer. Why? Because you do not close your doors.

Here let me ask you a question. Which of these six doors is the worst thing, which makes man suffer? The mind. How do you know it? Through your experience? Yes. Though you are meditating sitting here, and noting rising, falling, rising, falling, sitting, touching, rising, falling, sitting, touching. At the beginning of sitting the mind is concentrated to a certain extent on the rise and fall of the abdomen. But gradually when your mental effort becomes less, concentration becomes weak. Then the mind goes to your son? Yes, and if the son is very good you feel pleasant about him. If the son is bad you feel unpleasant about him. Then that pleasantness causes attachment or desire or love to arise. Aversion causes anger or hatred or disgust to arise. These are mental defilements. Then you suffer. But you are sitting here in the hall. You suffer a lot. Why? Because you could not close your mind doors. So to close these six doors is very important to live happily and peacefully.

That's why I also ask you could you note every thought in our interview. I want to remind you to note almost every thought as much as possible. Do not fail to note the thoughts because these thoughts make you suffer a lot. Their rise depends on mind and the thinkable object, dhamma. We call it dhamma, that object.

So, yesterday I explained to you when you look straight you must be aware of it; when you look aside you must be aware of it. But the Buddha proceeded with his chapter of clear comprehension like this, `When you bend your arms or legs you must be aware of it. When you stretch out you must be aware of it, as it is.` So when you bend the arms, observe, bending, bending, bending, bending, slowly. Not quickly. Slowly. Why do you need to slow down your activities? If you bend fast could you catch each movement of the arm? You can't. So to catch and to observe each movement of the arm you have to slow it down.

And why do you need to observe each movement of the arm very closely and precisely? Yes, here as you know there are three aspects of existence, mental or physical phenomena. Normally we do not realise or experience these three aspects of body-mind processes, or mental and physical phenomena. These processes of existence are called general characteristics of mental and physical phenomena or common characteristics of mental and physical phenomena.

Yesterday I told you about two levels of understanding of mental and physical phenomena. The first level is understanding of specific characteristics of mental and physical phenomena. I explained that the mind has its characteristics, cognising or perceiving the object. Then desire or lobha, attachment, has the specific characteristic of clinging to the object. Then dosa had the specific characteristic of rudeness. When you become angry you become rude. So dosa, anger, aversion has the specific characteristic of rudeness. And moha is ignorance. Sometimes it is translated into `delusion,` but `ignorance` is better I think. Ignorance, moha has the specific characteristic of covering the truth. When moha covers the truth you can't rightly understand it. You can't realise it because the truth is covered by moha, ignorance. Ignorance has the specific characteristic of covering the truth.

These are the three main roots of evil, the Buddha said: lobha, desire, attachment, craving, and dosa, anger, hatred, aversion, and moha, ignorance of the truth. These three mental factors are the main roots of evil, the Buddha said, because they make human beings suffer a lot.

I should continue to explain to you the specific characteristics of the other physical, material elements. This body, or physical process, is composed mainly of four material elements as you know. What are the four material elements which constitute the so-called body? Pathavi-dhatu, apo-dhatu, tejo-dhatu, vayo-dhatu.

Here pathavi means earth; dhatu means the element. Pathavi-datu means the earth element. Apo means water; dhatu means the element. Apo-datu, water element. Tejo means the fire; dhatu means the element. Tejo-dhatu means the fire element. Vayo is wind or air; dhatu is element. Vayo-dhatu, wind element or air element.

These are the four primary material elements which constitute the so-called body of a man or a woman. There are twenty-four other minor material elements, twenty-eight all together. The primary material elements are four, then the secondary elements are twenty-four. But the twenty-four secondary elements arise dependent on the four primary material elements, so the secondary elements are not so much important as the primary ones. That's why we have to watch the four primary elements.

Here when the say pathavi-dhatu, earth element, actually it is not earth because we have not the proper term for this nature, physical characteristic. We have to name it as pathavi-dhatu or earth element. Hardness and softness are the specific characteristics of the earth element. This hardness and softness is called pathavi-dhatu or earth element.

Did you observe it while you were meditating? It may be difficult for a meditator who sits on the cushion to find this element. It's better for you to sit on the floor without a cushion, then you'll find this element very distinctly. When you sit even on the cushion and your legs touch the floor, there you find hardness. When you sit on the cushion you find softness. When you feel soft or hard on any part of the body you must be aware of it, you must watch it: hard, hard, soft, soft. Why should you watch it? To close the door. If you do not observe soft, soft, soft, soft, soft, then you feel it pleasant. That pleasant feeling gives rise to attachment, desire for your cushion. Because you do not observe soft, soft, soft you are enjoying softness of the cushion and a pleasant feeling as well. That pleasant feeling causes attachment and desire to arise. So wherever you go you have to take this cushion to sit on. Please be careful whenever you observe your physical processes. Any of these specific characteristics of these primary four elements are distinct, so you should observe them. You can analyse or investigate them. Here analyse means not theoretically analysing, but when you know the softness or hardness through your experience by means of mindfulness of it. Then you don't take that softness as pleasant or unpleasant; you don't identify the feeling of softness with yourself.

The feeling of softness and the pleasant sensation is away from you. The feeling, the sensation of softness and pleasantness is here. Then you note it: pleasant, pleasant, soft, soft, soft. This pleasantness and the feeling of softness is not a person, not a being, not I, not you. You know that through your experience. Because you observe it you are mindful of it, you are aware of it. When you don't feel this pleasant or unpleasant sensation of soft as a person a being, an I or a you, then there won't arise any attachment or anger or aversion depending on that softness. Then you shut up your bodily sense doors and mental defilement cannot come to your mind through these doors. That's why the Buddha said, `When you feel soft or hard you must be aware of it.` That is the specific characteristic of the hard element.

The water element actually is not water. Its characteristics are fluidity and coalition. Fluidity and coalition are the specific characteristics of the water element and your body. Did you find fluidity and coalition in your mind when you were meditating? Yes, you experience them when you sit and note arising, falling, sitting, touching, arising, falling, sitting, touching. Sometimes you have a tearing, and also sometimes you have a sweating. These are the specific characteristics of the water element. Sometimes you feel some fluidity on your face or on your back. Then you have to note fluidity, fluidity and so on. Then when you open your eye and see, there's nothing because the fluidity is internal not external. Your internal bodily process, material process, had fluidity as its characteristic.

Then tejo-dhatu. We call it the fire element. Except that's actually not fire. It's temperature. Tejo-dhatu has as its characteristics heat and cold. Heat and cold are the specific characteristics of tejo-dhatu the Fire element or temperature element. Then do you experience that tejo-dhatu when you sit for meditation? A lot! Sometimes you feel as if you are sitting on the fire. Sometimes you are sitting on a block of ice. Cold and hot. Then you have to watch it, cold, cold, hot, hot. If you do not observe it then you'll identify that feeling of cold with yourself: `Oh I am cold, I am cold. I need some sweater or some blanket to cover on me,` because you identify the cold with yourself.

Actually cold is not yourself. Theoretically you know cold is not a person, not a being, not a man or not a woman, but you perceive it to be a person because, `I cold.` I am the man who feels cold. I am the woman who feels hot. Then cold and hot are identified with yourself and your person. Why? Because you do not close your door. Then what should you do? You should close your door, and note cold, cold, hot, hot, hot.

When your mindfulness becomes powerful and concentration deeper then you realise cold separate from your body or away from your body. The feeling of cold or hot is there. You are here, you are realising and noting it. Sometimes when concentration becomes deeper then there's no you or no person who notes the cold. But there's the mind that notes it. Then you come to realise the dual process of mentality and physicality and sensation too. At that moment your bodily form has disappeared from your mind. You are not aware of it; you are not conscious of it. Then you feel there's no person, no being, no I or no you, no self. What is really existing is a dual process of feeling of cold and the mind that notes it, that's all. Then there won't arise any mental defilement because these mental defilements arise dependent on the idea or the concept of a person, a being, an I or a you, a self. If you have destroyed that idea of a personal being then there won't arise any mental defilements because it has no seeds to grow out of it. Then here you have closed your doors.

After that there's the fourth one, vayo-dhatu, the Wind element or air element. It's also not actually wind or air. The wind element has movement as its specific characteristic: movement, motion, vibrating, supporting. Did you experience these specific characteristics when you sat in meditation? Rising falling, yes. Rising and falling, then sitting down and rising from the seat, you have the wind element. When you rise from the seat you have to rise gradually. Then that movement is the wind or air element. Both. So when you note rising, rising, rising, rising, or getting up, getting up, getting up, then what you should realise is the process of the rising movement from this your seat until you stand still.

There you realise the specific characteristic of the wind element, a series of many movements arising and passing away. The same way when you sit down, you have to be aware of sitting, sitting, sitting, sitting, sitting, sitting, sitting. Here what you are aware of is this sitting movement, all the movements which are involved in the act of sitting. Then you know the wind or air element. Then when your concentration is good enough and you come to realise when you sit down you don't find any man or human being or any body. What you find is a series of many movements going on.

You don't identify those movements with yourself. In other words you don't regard them as a person, a being, an I or a you. What is it? That's a natural process of physical phenomena. When you know that there won't arise any concept of a being a person an I or a you depending on that movement. You close your door. There won't arise any mental defilement, desire or attachment, anger or aversion. Then you live happy.

So, these are the specific characteristics of the primary material elements. I explained you the three specific characteristics of three groups of evil, lobha, dosa and moha, and also the specific characteristics of consciousness, mind. You have to realise them in the first level of understanding. Then when you proceed with your practise intensively and strenuously, when mindfulness is continuous and concentration deep, then you come to realise the general characteristics of mental and physical phenomena.

Those three aspects of existence, anicca, dukkha and anatta, Impermanence, suffering and impersonal nature, these are three characteristics of the existing mental and physical phenomena. Or these are known as general characteristics of mental and physical phenomena. After you have well realised the specific characteristics of mental and physical phenomena you are able to realise these three general characteristic of existing physical phenomena: impermanence, suffering, and impersonal nature or no-soul, no self, non-ego nature, of mental and physical phenomena.

What's impermanent? When a mental process arises and then passes away, that's impermanence. Having, raising, and then passing away very instantly. So when your concentration is good enough to note rising, falling, rising, falling, then you have to realise a series of many rising movements one after another; a series of many falling movements. A series of many movements means one movement arises and then passes away, then another movement arises and passes away, then another movement arises and passes away. Then we come to realise these elements are impermanent because they arises and then very instantly pass away. You have to go to that stage.

May all of you be able to realise both specific characteristics and general characteristics of body-mind process and achieve your goal.

ÖÄÄÄ

ÉÍÍÍ

So, lobha or attachment or desire, greed is one of the main roots of evil, evil things, evil deeds, evil speech, evil mind. When the mind becomes evil it's due to one of these three roots. Either lobha or dosa or moha.

Dosa means anger, hatred, ill will, aversion. Dosa is anger, hatred, ill-will, aversion. Moha is ignorance. Occasionally it is translated delusion. I do not like this word delusion. I preferred `ignorance,` because when you say illusion sometimes you get confused with wrong view: sakaya-ditthi, atta-ditthi. Say when you stretch out your legs towards the Buddha statue, does it mean respect or disrespect to the Buddha? When you stretch out your arms towards the Buddha statue then do you mean it as respect or disrespect to the Buddha? Respect, when you stretch out your arms. When you stretch out your legs towards the Buddha statue what do you mean? Disrespect. Yes. But sometimes you did it out of mere ignorance because you did not know it was disrespectful. You happened to stretch out your legs towards the Buddha. That behaviour is regarded as something with no volition or motive. Without disrespect you happened to do it. So if you feel disrespect towards the Buddha when you stretch out this leg then you must withdraw it. But if you do not withdraw it and keep stretching out then it's disrespect. It's done out of ignorance. There's a Burmese story but it may be everywhere in the world. There were two carpenters working together. One was the father, the other his son. The son was very foolish. The father was chopping a log when a deadly fly, one that is very harmful, that bites and sucks the blood of human beings, came to the father's forehead. The father was occupied over this work. He couldn't do anything with the fly. Then the son saw it. Out of compassion for his father he took an axe and he killed the deadly fly. The dead fly has gone. And father is very happy. He lie down and sleep for good. Now that killing was done out of ignorance, moha. This evil thing was done out of moha, ignorance.

So to eradicate this ignorance is the most important thing, in your daily life as well as your meditative life too. What should you do? Ignorance must be replaced by right understanding. Moha must be replaced by wisdom, or insight knowledge or enlightenment. To attain this what should you do? Yes, be mindful of your body-mind processes as they really are. You can learn scriptures so that you have a theoretical knowledge of the teaching of the Buddha, but theoretical knowledge has nothing to do with insight knowledge or enlightenment. While you are being mindful of any mental or physical process, if any theoretical knowledge comes to your mind and you use it for analysing any experience or technique then that theoretical knowledge is a hindrance to your concentration. It can't eradicate the ignorance. Ignorance must be replaced by right understanding through personal experience of Dhamma, body-mind processes.

Any evil deed or evil speech, evil mind, arises dependent on any of these three roots of evil, on lohba or on dosa or on moha. So these three roots of evil are completely destroyed. There won't arise any evil deed, evil speech or evil mind, and you have a wholesome speech and mind which result in happiness and peace. For example lobha: greed, desire, craving, lust, attachment. Lobha has as its characteristic the nature of clinging to the object. So clinging or being attached is the specific characteristic of lobha. The specific characteristic of dosa is rudeness. Dosa is translated `aversion.` It cannot have any characteristic of clinging because aversion is the opposite of clinging. Every mental state or emotional state, mental process, has its own specific characteristics.

So in the course of your meditational practise when the mind becomes deeper and deeper and more and more concentrated you come to realise mental or physical processes which are observed in their true nature. In the beginning of this realisation of mental and bodily processes you rightly understand their specific characteristics which are observed. So when you note attachment: attachment attachment attachment attachment, the attachment doesn't go away. It passes there in you mind and you continue to note attachment attachment attachment attachment attachment. The more mindful of attachment the more concentrated your mind is on it. When the mind is well concentrated on the attachment you come to realise attachment has the clinging nature to the object. You come to realise this. That is insight knowledge you have attained through your experience of mental processes. That is the first level of understanding of the specific characteristic of lobha, attachment.

Then when you observe the rising and falling movements of the abdomen very attentively and energetically, when concentration becomes deeper you come to realise the rising and falling movements without being conscious of the form of the body or the form of the abdomen. The form of the abdomen has disappeared in your mind; you are not aware of it. What you are realising is just the rising movement and falling movement and the mind that notes it. When your realisation becomes more and more clear and sharp what you are realising is just motion, movement, outward movement and inward movement. These are two processes of movements rising and passing away alternately. And also you know the mind that notes it is also rising and passing away. When you are realising the motion without being aware of yourself and your bodily form and the abdomen it means you are rightly understanding the specific characteristic of the wind element vayo-dhatu.

Why can you say this understanding of the process of dual movement is right? It may be wrong, because we have an abdomen and that abdomen rises and then falls back. If we are not conscious of the form of the abdomen and the form of the body and note just movements then it may be wrong. We can say definitely it's right because this right understanding has destroyed the false idea of a self, a soul, a person, a being. When you rightly understand just the outward movement and inward movement only you do not identify any movement of rising and falling with yourself, with your person, with your being. Then that idea or concept of a person a being an I or a you has been destroyed. When you don't have any idea of an I or you, a person or being, there won't arise any mental defilements such as lust greed hatred ignorance and so on. When mental defilements are destroyed there won't arise any suffering at all. Then you have attained the state of the cessation of all kinds of suffering. This cessation of suffering is attained through right understanding of the specific characteristic of the wind element which is constantly observed.

It leads you to the cessation of suffering because you follow any teaching of any religion to destroy dukkha, suffering and live happily and peacefully. That's your aim of following any doctrine, is it not so? That aim can be fulfilled by right understanding of mental and physical processes, especially here, rightly understanding the specific characteristic of the wind element Wyandotte. Is the doctrine which instructs you to be mindful of any mental or physical process so you can rightly understand it in its true nature right or wrong? Right, why? It leads you to the cessation of suffering which is undesirable for you. So out of two levels of right understanding, as soon as your concentration is good enough, deep enough, you come to realise the first understanding, the specific characteristic of mental and physical phenomena. Then when you proceed with your practise mindfulness becomes clear and sharp and concentration becomes deeper.

When concentration becomes deeper you come to realise the second aspect of mental and physical processes. That's the second level of understanding, that is, impermanence, suffering, and the impersonal nature of the process or no soul, no person. In Pali these are called anicca, dukkha, anatta. Anicca, impermanence; dukkha, suffering; anatta, impersonal nature or no soul no self. These three characteristics are concerned with all mental and physical processes. They are called common characteristics of mental and physical processes because they are in common with all mental and physical processes. So when you have lobha, attachment to have tea at this time, then does that lobha, attachment last very long? No. Then how long does it last? Yes. It lasts until you note it. When you note it you no longer have attachment to having tea. Then could we say attachment lasts very long or attachment is permanent? Because it rises and then passes away, it's impermanent. In other words lobha has the characteristic of impermanence, and the same with dosa and moha and the other

Some meditators are very sensitive to the arising of anger. So if you feel anger then is that anger everlasting or transient? Transient. Yes. When you note it very attentively it goes away, it disappears. It arises and then vanishes, so it's impermanent. There, dosa has also the characteristic of impermanence. In the same way, the rising and fall of the abdomen has the characteristic of impermanence. The bending movement and stretching movement of the arms has the characteristic of impermanence. Lifting, pushing, putting movements of the foot have the characteristic of impermanence. So it's the nature of impermanency to be in common with every mental and physical phenomenon. So they are called common or general characteristics.

Not only impermanence but also suffering, dukkha. Also the impersonal nature of mental and physical processes, anatta, no self-nature. So these three are called the common or general characteristics of body-mind processes. But at the third stage of insight knowledge you can more clearly realise these three characteristics of mental and physical processes. In the first stage of insight knowledge you realise the specific characteristics of mental and physical processes. Then it goes on the second stage and the third stage too. So when you proceed with your practise strenuously and intensively, concentration becomes deeper and deeper. Then you come to realise the movement of the foot and, say, the second level of right understanding. That's the general characteristic of the wind element vaya-dhatu.

When you note lifting what you are aware of is the lifting movement of the foot. When you note pushing what you are aware of is the pushing movement of the foot. When you note dropping what you are aware of is the dropping movement. When you note touching what you are aware of is the touching sensation. When you note pressing you note pressure. There, when you are aware of the lifting movement with deep concentration you do not realise it as permanent, a single process of movement. You realise it as a series of broken movements rising and passing away, from the very beginning of the lifting of the foot. There are many many movements which are rising and passing away.

Then sometimes meditators report their experience like this. `When I note the lifting movement - lifting lifting lifting - there are many many movements I experience, from the very beginning of lifting many tiny movements.` Then sometimes they said, `When I note lifting I find it as a folded Chinese fan.` This is folded, then it's stretched out it. The yogi knows it. He realises there are a series of many tiny movements arising and passing away one after another and he thinks, `Oh this is like a Chinese fan.` That means he realises the impermanence of each movement. One movement arises and then passes away, then another movement arises and passes away. In this way he sees a series of many gentle and soft tiny movements arising and passing away one after another. Then he realises impermanence. When he experiences the state of impermanence he is sure to realise the other mental and physical processes too as impermanent. So when he bends the arm he aware of bending bending bending, slowly slowly. Then because his concentration is good enough, deep enough, he comes to realise this bending movement is a series of many bending movements arising and passing away one after another. That is the realisation of the impermanence of mental and physical processes. Also he realises the mind that notes it is impermanent. This realisation is the second level of right understanding upon the general characteristic of the wind or air element, vayo-dhatu. When you are realising this impermanence of phenomena you come to realise they are rising and passing away, never lasting even a minute or second, ever changing, always appearing and disappearing. So they are not good or bad.

Then he comes to dukkha, suffering, because when he sees any mental or physical process ever changing, constantly rising and passing away every instant, the so-called mind is oppressed by that constant appearance and disappearance of phenomena. That is dukkha. Then when he discovers nothing is permanent, everything is transient and ever changing, appearing and disappearing, then does he take this mental process of ever changing as a person or a being, an I or a you? No. The idea of a person, a being arises dependent on the idea of a permanent body-mind process.

When you take this body of mine as permanent then you take it as a person, a being, an I or a you. When you realise this body-mind process is ever changing and transient and impermanent, it doesn't last even a millionth of a second, you don't take it to be a person, a being, an I or a you. Then you don't have the idea of atta. When you don't have the idea of atta it's called anatta. Anatta means non-self, non person, no person, or the impersonal nature of mental and physical processes. So in this way you come to realise the general or common characteristics of physical processes and at the same time the mind notes it.

When your right understanding or insight knowledge of mental and physical processes as impermanent becomes clearer, you come to realise the mind that notes it is also impermanent. Then you don't take any of the dual processes of mentality and physicality to be a person a being an I or a you. What you are realising at that moment is the incessant and continuous and constant changing of mental and physical processes which are arising and passing away one after another. When you take a set of phenomena which are forever changing you don't take them to be a person or a being. That false idea of a person a being, a self or a soul has been destroyed by right understanding of mental and physical processes.

So when you have rightly understood these body-mind processes in their true nature in these two aspects ignorance has been replaced by right understanding, insight knowledge we call it: vipassana nana. Vipassa nana. In other words, right understanding, vipassana nana, insight knowledge or experiential knowledge, has destroyed ignorance. Yesterday I told you ignorance has the characteristic of covering the truth. When ignorance has been destroyed, you uncover the truth. You can realise this truth: impermanence, suffering, no soul, no self nature of mental and physical phenomena. But because they are ever changing and constantly appearing and disappearing you come to realise it's dukkha. Then, do you want that to occur? If that occurs it's not wanted, not desired. Then you have to be mindful of whatever arises in your body and mind so that you can rightly understand mental and physical processes in their two aspects, their specific and general or common aspects: specific aspects of materiality and mentality, and general characteristics of materiality and mentality. Specific characteristics are where any mental or emotional state has its own characteristics, which are nothing to do with the other mentalities and physicalities.

There are only three common and general characteristics. Anicca, dukkha, anatta. Anicca means impermanence, transience, transitoriness, and flux. Dukkha, suffering, dissatisfaction, discomfort, and so on. Then anatta, no-self, no soul, no person, non-ego. These are the three characteristics of the whole of existence. If you rightly understand, if you can penetrate into these three aspects of body-mind processes, mental and physical phenomena, you are sure to be able to destroy attachment to any living being or non-living thing. When attachment, the cause of suffering has been destroyed there won't arise any suffering, dukkha at all. Without suffering, dukkha, you live in peace and happiness, when the cessation of suffering you have attained.

I think now you have rightly understood the aim of your mindfulness about all daily activities. So do not be reluctant, do not feel lazy. Be aware of all daily activities in more detail so you can have continuous mindfulness and deep concentration and a penetrating insight which realises the specific and general characteristics of mental and physical phenomena.

May all of you practise your meditation very intensively and continuously without any laziness, reluctance and tiredness and anger.

activities in the act of having the food. When you drink water or when you drink anything you must be aware of all the activities involved in these actions. When you chew something you must note chewing. When you lick something you must note the licking. We have a Burmese medicine for clearing of the throat, called yessa. That means a lickable salt. There we have to lick it. We mustn't take it.

* Postures

When you walk you must be aware of all the movements of the foot, slowing down your stepping. When you sit you should note the upright posture of the sitting. Not the form of the body, but the upright position of your body must be noted as sitting. When you focus your mind on your sitting you know that you are sitting. Then you note sitting.

In Burma some meditators when they are instructed to note the sitting posture find out the form of the body, the shoulder, the leg, the eyes, the nose, the head. Because they are looking for the form of the body they couldn't note it. But the Buddha doesn't instruct us to note these forms of the body. What the Buddha instructs is to note the upright posture of the body as sitting, because he would like us to realise the supporting nature of vayo-dhatu, the wind element. When you sit there's an air inside the body, and also air outside the body. The two airs support the body so it is sitting in an upright position. So to realise the nature of the supporting wind element the Buddha teaches us to note sitting. So you should focus your mind on the upright posture of the body and note it as sitting. In the same way the upright position of standing must be noted: standing standing standing, sitting sitting sitting and so on. Sometimes some yogis misunderstand this instruction so when they are instructed to note the sitting posture what they notice is the contact between the body and the floor or the seat. It's wrong. That's contact or touching, not sitting. The commentary to the text explains that sitting means the bending posture of the lower and the upright posture of the upper body. I instructed you to be aware of the upright posture of sitting, the upper body, because if you go down and be aware of the bending posture of the lower body your mind tends to go to the contact.

* Noting objects

So in sitting meditation if you are able to note the rising and fall of the abdomen very well and the concentration is somewhat good, then the mind tends to go out and wander because it can easily note the two movements of the abdomen. Then you need some more objects to note so as to make the mind too busy to have any time to go out. So when you are able to note the rise and fall of the abdomen very well you should note the sitting posture and the touching sensation too, either of the two or one of the two. Say rising falling and sitting, or rising falling, touching - any point of the touching sensation which is more distinct than the other points. So, rising falling sitting touching, rising falling sitting touching. You must be aware of four objects successively and continuously, not separately.

Some meditators misunderstand so they note two objects separately. Sometimes they note rising and falling, rising and falling; sometimes sitting, touching, sitting, touching. When you are able to note these four objects constitutively and successively you must do four, not two separately. But sometimes you may be not able to note all the four constitutively. Then you should note their rise and fall separately, then sitting touching. If the abdominal movement is good for you to note you should stay with it. Unless it's good for some reason you can note the sitting and touching sensations alternately: sitting touching, sitting touching.

Sometimes some meditators very easily feel their heartbeat when concentrating on the movement of the abdomen, because when they note the rise and fall of the abdomen they make too much mental effort breathing. That effort makes the heart beat and sometimes they confuse the movement of the abdomen with the heartbeat. For such meditators the sitting posture and touching sensation are good at the beginning of the practise. Later on you will be able to note all these four objects very well, systematically and methodically.

So if a meditator has no problem with the heartbeat he should continue to note the rise and fall of the abdomen. But if he thinks he needs more objects then note the sitting posture and touching sensation too. So rising falling, sitting touching; rising falling, sitting touching. You have to note the sitting posture and touching sensation before the rising movement starts again. In other words between the falling movement and the rising movement you should insert the two objects, sitting and touching, so that your mind doesn't have any time to go out. The point is to make the mind quite occupied with the object.

One meditator here reported in his interview that he didn't note the intention before lifting. He noted only six objects of movements of the foot. I asked why he didn't note anything. He said because he was too busy to note this and this before lifting. A bit of time, even a millionth of a second, and the mind goes out. So the mind must be occupied with objects. You should note intending, lifting, pushing, dropping, touching, pressing, and so on.

The same with sitting. When you think you have a little bit of time between the falling movement and the rising movement of the abdomen, you must fill up that gap with the two objects or one of the two, the sitting posture and the touching sensation. So after you have noted the falling movement you note sitting, touching before you start to note the rising movement. Sometimes you may find it difficult to note two objects before rising again. Then you should note one object, the sitting or touching sensation, so that you have better and deeper concentration.

So when you sit you must be aware of the sitting posture. When you stand you must be aware of the standing posture. When you lie down you must be aware of the lying posture: lying lying lying. In Burma one of the old monks about ninety years could walk twenty-four hours; he could sit twenty-four hours; lie down twenty-four hours by being aware of it without sleeping. Two years back he passed away at the age of ninety-two I think. He had been meditating since forty years of age. I think you should imitate him. He could sit for twenty-four hours without changing position. He walked twenty-four hours. He lay down twenty-four hours. If you lie down two minutes then you fall asleep.

In lying down you see the abdomen movement is very distinct. When lying down note, rising falling lying, rising falling lying, rising falling lying. This is good medicine for insomnia. When you wake up the first thing of which you are conscious most be noted. During any meditation of ten days you are not able to do that even though you try it. As the Buddha said, as soon as you are awake you should note the consciousness about wakening: wakening wakening wakening wakening. After that you want to open your eyes: wanting wanting, or wishing wishing. And then when you open the eyes, opening opening. And so on.

These are the examples you should take for awareness for daily activity. The Buddha teaches us these examples. The point is to have continuous and constant mindfulness for the whole day. There is not a mental state, emotional state or physical process of which you should not be mindful as it is so that you can have a continuity of mindfulness which is the cause of deep concentration on which insight knowledge is built up. When that insight knowledge is realised, or the specific characteristics or general characteristics of mental and physical processes, then you go through all thirteen stages of insight knowledge one after another, and higher and higher. After you have completed all the thirteen stages of insight knowledge you become enlightened. That means you attain the first stage of enlightenment. It's called Magga. The Path. When you have attained the first stage of enlightenment you totally uproot the most important defilement, sakaya-ditthi, the false view of a person a being an I or a you, and also doubt about the triple gems. These two mental defilements are uprooted, including their potentiality. Then you feel happy, you live in peace and happiness.

There are some who have gone through about four or five stages. There may be someone who has gone through about eight or seven.

There may be some who have gone through ten or eleven. I would like all of you to complete all thirteen stages of insight knowledge. Ten days meditation is just training, just the learning stage. But you have some deep concentration occasionally and also some insight which penetrates into reality of the body-mind processes.

* Benefits of mindfulness meditation

So now I would like to explain to you the benefits of this mindfulness meditation, because we haven't time enough. I think I should explain to you the seven benefits of this mindfulness, vipassana meditation.

1. Purification

Saddana vissudi means this mindfulness meditation must be practised for purification of beings. This is the first benefit.
If you are mindful of any mental or physical process, if your concentration is good enough, at the moment of deep concentration on this mental or physical process your mind is purified. It's free from all kinds of mental defilements, all kinds of hindrances. To purify one's mind one has to practise mindfulness meditation. Translated literally, the meaning is that to purify your mind and body you must practise mindfulness meditation.

2. Overcoming sorrow

Then the second benefit is overcoming worry, sorrow and lamentation. The second benefit is sorrow and worry. You overcome sorrow and worry even though you failed in your business. You don't worry about it; you don't feel sorry.

3. Overcoming lamentation

The third benefit is overcoming lamentation. When you have completely realised the mental and physical processes and their true nature by means of mindfulness meditation, even though your relative dies, or even though your sons or parents die you won't cry over it. You have exterminated this lamentation for the dead. When you practise this mindfulness meditation to attain higher stages of insight knowledge, at least eleven stages should be attained through this mindfulness meditation, then you don't feel sorry or worry and you don't have lamentation.

In Burma some of the female meditators practise this meditation in the first retreat say about ten or fifteen days, then the second two months or two and a half months then later on she may continue every day at home. Then when her husband dies she won't feel sorry. She won't lament. Is it good or bad? Good. Why doesn't she feel sorrow and find that she laments? Attachment. Attachment is destroyed to a certain extent. She can have less attachment to her husband by means of mindfulness meditation because she has realised the specific and general characteristics of body-mind processes to a large extent. So her attachment to her husband becomes less and less, because the less attachment doesn't make her weep or cry or lament. That's why I would like you to do it at least two or three months intensively and strenuously. In Burma many meditators take two or three months. Some meditators practise six months continuously.

4. Overcoming grief

Then, the fourth benefit is the overcoming of grief. In the full retreat you can do away with grief, when your mindfulness meditation is fully practised. Here grief means mental suffering. Mental suffering is exterminated, done away with, by this mindfulness meditation.

5. Overcoming physical suffering

And also pain here means physical suffering. All kinds of physical suffering are destroyed through mindfulness meditation. In Burma there are some who cured illness by means of mindfulness meditation. The fifth benefit is overcoming physical suffering, dukkha. Mental suffering is known as domanassa in Pali. Physical suffering is known as dukkha. Domanassa is mental suffering, mental dukkha. Physical suffering is dukkha itself. These two aspects of suffering are removed by means of mindfulness meditation.

6. Enlightenment

Then the sixth benefit is attainment of path knowledge. That's one of enlightenment. In Buddhism there are four stages of enlightenment a meditator has to attain through his mindfulness meditation, after he has completed all thirteen stages of insight knowledge. The first stage is known as sotapanna-magga . The second stage is known as sakadagami-magga. Third stage is known anagami-magga. The fourth stage is known as arahatta-magga. All these four stages of enlightenment can be attained when you have thoroughly realised anicca, dukkha and anatta of bodily and mental processes. When impermanence, suffering, the impersonal nature of body-mind processes are thoroughly realised then you can attain all these four stages of enlightenment.

It's easy to explain about this attainment of four stages of enlightenment but practically it's very difficult. But difficulties must be overcome by perseverance. Patience and perseverance are needed to overcome difficulties in any work. Then the attainment of these four stages of enlightenment, path knowledge is the sixth benefit. Path knowledge here means the four stages of enlightenment.

7. Nibbana

Then finally you attain to Nibbana by mindfulness meditation. What do you mean by Nibbana? Where do you see Nibbana, on earth or underground or in heaven or in the sky? Nowhere. Ah, but the Buddha said Nibbana is in you. The place where you attain to Nibbana is yours, your body and mind. Unless you have realised your body-mind processes you cannot attain Nibbana. Only when you have fully realised your body-mind processes and two levels of understanding, then you are sure to attain Nibbana. So Nibbana is with you, not very far, very close.

Nibbana means the cessation of all kinds of suffering. When mental suffering as well as physical suffering ceases to exist that state is known as Nibbana. Where do you have mental and physical suffering? Mind and body. These two kinds of suffering exist in the mind and body. Where do these two aspects of suffering stop or cease? Our mind and body. Because they arise in my mind and body, so they must stop at my mind and body. The cessation of all kinds of suffering, mental and physical suffering, ceases to exist when you have eradicated all mental and physical defilements by means of mindfulness meditation. So the attainment of the cessation of suffering is the seventh benefit of mindfulness meditation. You should remember these benefits theoretically and you should experience them practically.

So to gain these seven benefits what you need first is faith or belief in the triple gems, especially in the technique of your meditation: faith or belief or confidence through understanding. Blind faith is not needed here. Faith through understanding is called saddha. That saddha is the first mental faculty. Here mental faculties we call indriya in Pali. There are five indriyas, five mental faculties a yogi must be endowed with. The first is faith, blind faith or faith with understanding. You have to understand the Buddha Dhamma or the technique to a certain extent so that you can have faith in it. Without understanding it you can't have any faith or confidence or belief in it Faith with understanding is the basic requirement of a meditator for success in his meditation. The second need is energy. If you do not put enough energy into your practise you can't realise any mental or physical phenomena. It's called viriya in Pali.

The third need is sati. It's translated as mindfulness, awareness, the third faculty a yogi must be endowed with. It means when you have faith with understanding of the technique or the Dhamma, you put enough energy or viriya in your practise, then you are able to be mindful of any mental or physical process as it really is. Then when mindfulness becomes continuous and constant your mind becomes concentrated on the object of meditation very well. So the fourth one is concentration, samadhi, concentration of mind. When the mind is deeply concentrated on any mental or physical phenomenon there arises insight knowledge or penetrating knowledge or experiential knowledge which penetrates into the intrinsic nature of mental and physical phenomena, specific individual characteristics of the body-mind processes. This is the intrinsic or true nature of mental and physical phenomena.

So when you realise any specific characteristic of mental or physical phenomena you have insight. Or when you realise the passing away of any mental or physical processes, or their coming and going, then you come to realise the general characteristic of anicca, impermanence, the general characteristic of mental and physical phenomena. That realisation, right understanding or insight or experiential knowledge is known as pannya in Pali. Pannya is sometimes translated as wisdom. Here insight or enlightenment is the fifth faculty with which a yogi must be endowed.

You should have five mental faculties: faith, energy, mindfulness, concentration, and insight and enlightenment. Faith means saddha. Energy means viriya. Mindfulness means sati. Concentration means samadhi. Insight, enlightenment, pannya. So, saddha, viriya, sati, samadhi, pannya, these are the five mental faculties a yogi must be endowed with.

* Balance

And here these five mental faculties must be strong enough, powerful and sharp. The Vissudimagga, a meditation text, mentions when these five mental faculties become sharp you are sure to realise either the specific or general characteristics of body-mind processes. So you should try to make them sharp and keep balance. Here also the text said of the five mental faculties, saddha and pannya, faith and understanding or insight must be kept balanced. So viriya and samadhi, concentration and energy or effort must be kept in balance. When saddha is strong and viriya is weak, when faith is strong and energy or effort is weak, then the yogi may become credulous. The yogi tends to have gullibility. He is easily deceived.

And saddha, faith or confidence must be balanced with wisdom or pannya, insight knowledge. When you have some insight knowledge into the physical and mental processes then you know the only way which can lead you to the cessation of suffering or to the realisation of body-mind processes is mindfulness meditation. You can judge through your experience, then nobody can deceive you about the method or technique of the meditation. So you don't believe in any other technique or any other way because by way of mindfulness you have experienced some realisation or understanding of mental and physical phenomena. You yourself know it's the right way so you don't believe in any other way, you don't become credulous.

But if wisdom is strong and faith is weak, then he can be a fool in his meditation because his concentration is weak. His concentration is weak because he has a lot of preconceived ideas through theoretical knowledge of Buddhism and other philosophies. So whenever he has experienced, or before he has any experience, he analyses the technique or the experience. He thinks about it. He uses preconceived ideas to analyse this technique or the experience. Then he has a lot of thoughts which distract him. How can he concentrate his mind on the object?

That's why we ask our yogis to keep aside all thought, all analytical knowledge, preconceived ideas, philosophical thinking, logical reasoning while they are engaged in meditation, so that there won't be hindrances to their progress. If he has a great deal of knowledge about Dhamma or any other philosophy, he attempts to analyse or reason, he attempts to criticise the Dhamma or the experience or the technique. Then it's a hindrance. So wisdom or knowledge must be balanced with saddha. Because I have faith, confidence in this technique I come here and practise. So these must be kept aside as long as I'm engaged in this mindfulness meditation.

Then concentration and energy must be in balance. When concentration is strong and energy, effort is weak you have the close friend of a yogi, sloth and torpor. So when you can concentrate very well on the abdominal movement and concentration becomes deeper and deeper, the noting mind notes the object of its own accord without any effort. Then the effort or energy becomes gradually less and less, decreasing. Concentration becomes weaker and weaker and gets into sloth and torpor. So when concentration's strong and effort is weak you are sure to get into sloth and torpor. To correct it you must make some more effort in your noting. Be careful, note energetically and precisely.

Then when viriya, energy is strong and concentration is weak you can't concentrate too well, because when you are greedy to experience more and more Dhamma you put too much effort into your noting. You note very energetically when the mind is not concentrated you are not satisfied with your practise. Then you get restless and have distraction distraction distraction, and depression. No concentration at all. So energy or effort must be kept by concentration, and balance. Your effort must be reduced. You must reduce your effort, then again you note feeling calmness and tranquillity. Be calm and tranquil and note steadily. Do not be greedy, do not hesitate. Then your mind will concentrate gradually. So these two twins mental faculties must be in balance. Then you are sure to attain the four stages of enlightenment.

Please try to make steady effort, enough effort, and have a great deal of faith and confidence in your practise.

as to use sensation for phassa. Elsewhere, in the Suttas, vedanaý is described in terms of what we must call feeling- 'pleasure, pain and neutral vedanaý.' But it is always 'feelig-on-occasion-of sense.' It is never emotion, senti-ment. 'Craving,' lit. thirst, is natural or uregenerate desire. Grasping' might almost be rendered 'will,' 'impulse to action.' 'Becoming' (bhava) is another erux. Described always in terms of the where or how or rebith, it seems to stand rather for that tendencey to, or resultant force for, new birth, which is the outcome of desire and will for life. But that is not the old way.

No two translators would agree all the way. Our only general caveat is against reading profound metaphysical concepts into this old series. It was not in each word that the depth of the meaning lay. The reader should imagine himself telling a child how in life this brings about that.

The sequence of the terms is only intelligible if thy are held, as they are universally held in the modern East, to involve a reference to man's whole life-continuum, not this one litte span of it that we in the West miscall 'our life,' Gotama accepted that belief. He lifted it, out of the vague Empedklean utterances we find in the earlier books, to a fairly clear doctrine of the 'five gati's,' or goings (or destinies). Of such is man's life in the Suttas. And in the causal formula, 'ignorance' and 'activities' refer to the whole of the previous lives : the one is the prior incaleulable limit (with implica-tion of want of knowledge as the chief feature of those lives),

The remainder are inserted incidentally. Of considerable importance, it may be, in our eyes, here they feature as adjuncts. And there are not a few interesting sidelights. The rest is largely repettion. Either the Suttas are identical, or they vary in some detail. The Buddha may have, in his long mission, repeated himself often, with varied touches. Or his chuch may have recorded some one remembered saying, and many teachers may each have added an application. Such may have been, for instance, the case in 'Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, flattery,' and its concluding exordium (Chap. XVII.), or in the saying beginning 'Incalculable is the beginning, brethren, of this faring on!' (Chap. XV.). Naturally all such recorded variants were fathered on the founder, just as he is made to take upon himself sayings by his disciples of which he approved.

doctrine. And we are left to the conclusion that, at the centres, Sa‰vatth†ý for chief. where a few genuine sayings of the Founder and many formulas were handed down, the repeaters were intellectually incapable first of retaining, then of compiling, plausble, let alone faithful, reproductions of his teaching. Let the reader try to imagine any live man, especially such a live man as Gotama, expounding a better docteine in a way so wooden and inept as the talk to Timba-ruka. Let him try to imagine the listener responding cen-vinced and enthusiastic. For that matter even the pundit's reply is a formula.

But thich as is the crust of the set word-scheme over these records, some signs of that variety of utterance which is life peep through. The order of the twelve bases is once or twice altered and new terms are introduced (p.71).

Yet morerefreshing is it to find that oasis on p. 26 (XII., ›27), where a causal sequence of joy and happiness is, for this once only, harnessed to the scheme ! How might it not have sltered the whole face of Buddhism to the West if that sequence had been made the illustration of the causal law !-

WHAT IS BUDDHISM?**

Sayadaw U Thittila (Abhidhaja Maha Rattha Guru of Burma)

What is Buddhism, is it a philosophy a religion or an ethical system? Strictly speaking it is not a philosophy, for it does not contain an elaborate system of theories and facts exclusively for cognition, although it must be admitted that the Buddha has anticipated much modern speculation.

What is known as Buddhism consists of three aspects, the Doctrinal (pariyatti), the Practical (pattipatti), and the Realisable (pativedha) which are interdependent and interrelated. This doctrine is preserved in the Tripitaka. This Tripitaka, which contains the word of the Buddha, is estimated to be about eleven times the size of the Christian Bible. As the word itself implies, the Tripitaka consists of three baskets, namely: the Basket of Discipline (Vinaya Pitaka), the Basket of Discourses (Sutta Pitaka) and the Basket of Ultimate Things (Abhidamma Pitaka).

The Vinaya Pitaka, which is sub-divided into five books. deals with the rules and regulations of the Order of monks and nuns and gives a detailed account of the life and ministry of the Buddha. The Sutta Pitaka consists of discourses preached by the Buddha, and also in some instances, by his foremost disciples such as the Venerable Sariputta, Moggallana and Ananda. Divided into twenty-six books it is rather like a collection of prescriptions, for the discourses were propounded to suit the occasion and the temperament of different individuals. The Abhidhamma Pitaka, however, is the most important and the most interesting because it elaborates the four ultimate things i.e., consciousness (citta), mental properties mental concomitants, (cetasika), matter or material qualities (rupa) and Nibbana.

So we see that Buddhism is concerned with truth and facts, and has nothing to do with theories and philosophies which may be accepted as gospel truth today and be thrown overboard tomorrow. The Buddha presented us with no new astounding philosophical theories, nor did he venture to create any new material science, rather he explain what is within and without so far as it concerns our emancipation, and ultimately he laid out a path of deliverance that is unique.

Is it then a religion? Neither is it a religion in the sense in which the word is commonly understood, for it is not a system of faith or worship. Buddhism does not demand blind faith from its adherents; mere belief is dethroned and replaced by confidence, Saddha, as it is known in Pali, based on knowledge of truth. The confidence placed by a follower in the Buddha is like a sick man towards the physician, or that of a student towards his teacher. A Buddhist seeks refuge in the Buddha because it is he who discovered the path of deliverance. A sick man should use the remedy the pupil should study what his teacher says in order to become learned. In just the same way, a Buddhist who possesses saddha follows the Buddha's instructions in order to gain deliverance.

Is Buddhism then, an ethical system? It no doubt contains an excellent code of morals that is adaptable to all climes and ages, but it is much more than ordinary morality. The Singala Sutta (Sigalovada Sutta), Mangala Sutta, Metta Sutta, Vasala Sutta, Dhammika Sutta etc., should be read carefully to understand the high standard of morality; but morality, or sila, is only the A.B.C. of Buddhism.

Buddhism, therefore is neither a philosophy nor a religion, nor an ordinary ethical code, it is the doctrine of actuality, a means of deliverance; or, as it is called in Pali, the Dhamma.

The right-minded person concerns him or herself with the act, and not with the consequences; he considers not what is pleasant or unpleasant, but what is good and right according to the rules of morality. When he does right, and does not seek any result, he is relived of all the burden of doubt, fear and perplexity, he never becomes involved in the inextricable tangle of difficulty. His mind is at peace, his conscience is serene; these are the requisites for health, happiness and long life.

There are two kinds of emotions. negative or destructive, and positive and constructive. Take as an illustration two persons who meet financial disaster. One reacts emotionally and falls into a stormy sea of bitterness, loses all hope and sinks in health, vigour and resolution, or he kills himself to end it all. The otther man, who has learnt to think over the problems of life, to meditate, to rationalise applies every available method to overcome the problem and finds a satisfactory solution, for he has exercised his mind just as the athlete exercises his muscles. He is the master, while the other is a slave. Many disappointments and breakdowns would not exist if people were to live according to the Dhamma.

So you see, Buddhism is a philosophy of hope and certainty of achievement. It is the gospel of attainment of deliverance from unhappiness and suffering. The Buddha explained that in every mortal, however humble or lowly he may be, there is a grain of worth, a little of goodness, a spark of wisdom that can be kindled into a flame, which can be developed by conscious human effort. The Buddha encouraged everyone to strive for spiritual development, declaring that every right effort is sure of a reward here and now, in this life, or in a future one.

The Buddha also proclaimed that every low desire, every longing for ignoble things, every unworthy feeling that we conquer and every difficulty that we meet heroically and victoriously, which righteously according to the rules of morality, becomes another rung on the ladder by which we can climb to a nobler, higher life. This is the law of progressive development, the Buddhist doctrine of evolution, of attainment, of accomplishment

The Buddha drew for us the picture of progressive existence, a growth from small to great, from less to more, from ignorance to knowledge, of development depending on inward strength, diligence put forth from life to life. This is the doctrine of human perfection won through altruism, discipline and wisdom.

The name of the founder of Buddhism was Gotama, this being the name of the clan or family to which he belonged.

The word Buddha means 'awakened' or 'enlightened' one, and is not a name but a title of honour bestowed upon the sage Gotama. Gotama was born the son of an Indian king on what is now the boarder of modern Nepal six hundred and twenty-three years before Christ.

Dhamma, this law of righteousness, exists not only in a man's heart and mind, but it exist in the universe also; all the universe is an embodiment or revelation of Dhamma. The laws of nature and the mind of man. If a man lives by Dhamma, he will escape and come into Nibbana, the final release from suffering.

According to Buddhism the universe evolved, but it did not evolve out of nothingness, it evolved out of the dispersed matter of a previous universe; and when this universe is dissolved. its dispersed matter, or its residual energy which is continually renewing itself, will in time give rise to another universe in the same way. The process is therefore cyclic and continuous, and the universe itself is composed of millions of world systems, each with its various planes of existence.

That which we call 'man' is composed of mind and matter. According to Buddhism, apart from mind and matter (nama and rupa) which constitutes the so called man, there is no such thing as an immortal soul, (atta) which lies behind them. Matter (rupa) is the invisible qualities and forces, and there are altogether twenty-eighty types of material qualities which constitute the physical body of an animate being. Mind (nama) is the most important part of a being, and consists of the four mental aggregates, namely:

Feeling, of whatever kind (Vedana)

Perception, of sense objects, or reaction to the senses (Sanna)

Mental Properties -fifty types of mental formations including good and evil tendencies and faculties (Sankhara)

Consciousness, which is the fundamental factor of all the other three (Vinnana)

Buddhism teaches that with the practice of meditation and mind culture one can acquire the Insight Kowledges and thus attain Nibbana in this life itself. Through this enlightenment and wisdom, one can reach the end of this chains of rebirths.

Nibbana is not annihilation, neither is it kind of nothingness, it is state free from any possibility of the re-arising of the conditioned existence, the ultimate peace and happiness.

All the teachings of the Buddha can be summed up in one verse:

To refrain from all evil

To do what is good

To cultivate the mind

This is the teaching of the Buddha.

Yet what a lovely lesson must it have been in the way it was actually given, showing surely that we may suffer as man, or enjoy as man, for what we did as boy :-same yet different. That we may feel in this life the effects of what we did last life :-same yet different. Could we but have before as the real lesson, we should understand Timba-ruka's response.

Other important sayings with a genuine ring, but treated as incidental, are that about past 'karma' and the present body and mind of us (p. 44), that giving three equivalent terms for mind (p. 65), where the famous monkey-simile occurs, and that giving the refrain of assurance of ultimate salvation, the triumph-song of him who is lcading the good life (p. 47 ˜.). emphasis on heterogeneity in elements is discussed in a way suggestive of an Aýbhidhammika compiler. The word dhaÞtu is much to the fore in the Third Pitaka : and the subject occupied considerably the early aeademic eulture revealed in such works as the Abhidhammakosa and its eommentaries. The ring of the older Suttas is rather to be found in the little dialogue on the subject in Majjhima i, 295 =Vol. V. (XLVIII.,

The interest here lies in the general reflections on life as existence under a certain 'set of conditions' or dhaýtu (p. 101, n. 1). The reaction of this upon feeling is mixed.
Hence man's efforts to better his conditions. Pain is the vis a tergo by which he seeks betterment.

But hte conelusion is monastic. The drawing power of happiness is omitted. We are reminded of a gardener who is placed in a garden that is weedly but has possibilities, and who downs tools and disposes himself to leave. We should not think highly of the gardener. We do not seem to eatch the living savings of the founder.

The remaining chapters are of no small interest. Not doctrinally, but because they afford us sidelights on some of those early followers of whom we know little. It is true that the Lakkhana, 'Mark,' who gives the name to the nineteenth chapter, is met with here only. And we may be sure, without even consulting them, that crities will have judged that 'Mark' referred originally to that rather irrtating smile 4 1 -1 1 0 0

which is made to reeur at one heartrending scene after another, and that the questioning brother is a fiction to fit the word.

The smile, for all buddhaghosa's aplolgy, does not commend Moggallaýna to us. He is a little akin to the mighty medicine-man Kassapa of Uruvelaý, whom Gotama competed with on his own level, to win a safe position as a teacher. Aýnanda might have shed a recurring tear, Saýriputta might have 'uttered moan.' The Master's rejoinder is a saying that recalls his hesitation when beginning to teach gospel. But here it is : 'If they believed me not, it would hurt' -not me, but - 'them.' What was this saying really intended to convey ?

In Kassapa called Great (chap. XVI.) we come upon a finer character. He appears a most unlikely man to come forward and take up the heavy task of succeeding such a leader. A confirmed recluse, he even keeps away from his Master when both are aged. there is no sign that the latter saw in him a successor. He only associates Kaccapa with himself as a sound teacher. How strange it seems to a modern world, that no word passes between them as to any system of memorizing the records, the first task that the orphaned order actually set about ! And in a way of almost incredible naiveteˆ.
But Kassapa had the sterling virtue of utter unworldliness. And how sorely that was needed in the Order, not only subsequently, but in the lifetime of the founder, the books show but too well.

We can well believe that the formula running through chap. XVII.: -'Dire, brethren, are gains, favours, flattery. . . . Thus and thus must ye train your-selves' was often uttered by Gotama himself, in unwearied admonishing of his followers against being still of the world though not in the world. Was it indeed always unwearied ? It was a long life of service; and when we read of the many quarrelsome, greedy, impure, stupid, 'futile' bhikkhus, in Vinaya and Sutta, we venture to believe, that there were hours when he longed to pack them off the what they called the 'low things,'

Much more might be said if we were presuming to offer this translation to the scholar of Pali literature. The general reader is mostly in our thoughts. And for him there is no problem so near as this : - Where in these pages is Gotama ? How much of them, how little, is a blend of (it may be) original sayings clearly or confusedly reproduced, of fillings by ages of successive narrators, of memory-schemes drawn up by teachers, not teachers of the multitude but of orally learning pupils, of efforts, often clumsy, by editors to set down in writing much that had so long been more fluently told ? of them, narrators, teachers, editors, were men whose choice of ideals of life differed from that of the rest of the world, differed the more in proportion as they were sincerely not of the world as well as not in it. Through this distorting medium he has to read, and adk himself which sayings, put into the mouth of a certain aceredited teacher and 'way-shower' of truth, are likely to have come from such a man as he is recorded to have bee ? Not a brahmin, not a pundit, not a 'Wanderer'; a nobleman born and bred in the purple, albeit of a petty court, a man of singularly independent mind, but single-minded in his long work or helping men to think and to live, a man who left himself, planted by himself, on no pedestal, who left no successor commissioned to seehe was so planted- is there anything in these pages that this wise and loving, but bery human friend of man would be likely to have said, and to have so said as to win over men of all sorts and conditions ?

In the dark days succeeding the completion of Part I, and when other labours were blocking the way, Mr. F.L. Woodward wrote from his new Tasmanian hame offering service. With purely disinterested kindness of heart he consented to write for us a draft translation of Part II. 'Joyous and swift is his wisdom' like Saýriputta's. In a few months the typescript was done, completed even to footnotes. This we have used throughout for reference, for suggestion, and to check our translation, for which we alone are responsible. We connot sufficiently thank him for the brotherly hand that has helped us to keep walking. Not many would have spent well-earned leisune hours in rendering service from aeross the world like this. Nor is his good will confined to Part II. May life in our next rebirth not find us so far apart !

ZEN PRACTICE AND SELF-CONTROL

[I] Characteristics of SATORI (enlightenment) in Zen

Zen consists of two main structures. SANSHI-MONBO (attending to the Law personally und KUFU-ZAZEN (single-minded Zen meditation) in which a person uses self-effort to establish

[II] Purpose of Zen Practice and Motivation

The Purpose of practising Zen is not just to achieve health of body and mind. but also to aim

In addition to previously explained terms, enlightenment is also often referred to as SHOGY

[II] Active Zen (Daily Activities)

Zen Buddhism is said to be the religion of our daily life. Daily activities are regulated by the r for the Zen monastic life. A practitioner believes and performs daily activities in Zen monasti the Buddha's Way itself and devote himself wholeheartedly to his activities. Through this kin concentration, an acting self as a subject unite with an action as an object and then a consc

(3) Bathing, going to the toilet and fatigue work of temple: Our daily activities are performed and unconsciously. But in Zen monastery, a practitioner's activities are not automatic nor un concentrates his attention upon these trifling but immediate daily works and performs these one by one. It could change his way of experiencing or sensing for these activities and make new meaning for these.

(4) Having breakfast : Rules of having breakfast are somewhat complicated. Ways of using small dish-cloths, or eating rice porridge are regulated in detail. Here I will consider about th changes brought about by concentrating his attention on his action and the psychological m

one. This is done for the purpose of learning the co-ordination of relationship between cogni behaviour. The second stage is to reunite components that had been broken down.

As this process progresses. a practitioner can reach the point where all actions can be perfo automatically without conscious attention paid to them. In the third stage, a practitioner's inte accomplish the rules. and actual accomplishment of them unite completely as one.

This stage is often called SHUKYAKU-GOITSU (unification of subjectivity and objectivity), M or self-renunciation) or ZAMMAI (this word denotes a state in which the mind is free from dis absorbed in intense, purposeless concentration). Concisely stated, in this third stage one's i characteristic of active Zen is to bring about the new awareness to daily activities through co attention upon such action and unifying his subjectivity and objectivity by intense absorption

[IV] Static Zen (ZAZEN)

Static Zen (Zazen) essentially does not differ differ that much from Active Zen in the sense t to follow the way of Buddha-Way. In daily life, Static Zen is integrated in active Zen. They af other, and together they deepens the stage of enlightenment. The mental state attained in Z effect in daily activities.

Zazen consists of an interaction between the following elements : CHOSHIN (regulation of b (regulation of respiration) and CHOSHIN (regulation of mind). Following is a brief summary o

(a) CHOSHIN : Chosin consists of arranging one's posture. Having set all relations aside an everything to rest controlling one's posture, a practitioner sits in full or half lotus position with open and hands positioned to form the symbol of Cosmic Mudra (JOIN). A round cushion is and the back is straight. A right triangle is formed between both knees with the coccyx as the
and the center of gravity is placed in the middle of this triangle.

(b) CHOSOKU : Chosoku consists of arranging and controlling one's respiration. In the begi exercise. the practitioner counts his breaths, beginning with one-two-three and so forth Once this, the practitioner then changes to long exhalations and short inhalations. when doing this a lotus position. the pattern of respiration becomes one of abdominal breathing with the diap strongly and stomach pressure concurrently rising.

(c) CHOSHIN : Chosin consists of arranging or controlling one's mind through a process con

[V] Physiological Studies on Zazen

The effects on body and mind of the full lotus position have not been fully clarified. however

In Hirai's study (1960), and Kasamatsu and Hirai's study (1969) (1984), a series of level of meditation phenomena such as appearance of alpha waves (Stage I), increase in its amplitu slowing down in its frequency (Stage III), appearance of rythmical theta train (StageIV) were with over twenty years of practice, although their eyes rernain opened. Results of their study phenomena like dehabituation of alpha blocking, some increase in rate of heartbeats and ac spontaneous GSR. Usually, alpha waves appear when people have their eyes closed. Howe although they have their eyes opened. their alpha waves appear and increase in their amplit in their frequency. This indicates that their levels of arousal are getting lower, But at the sam rate of their heartbeats increases a little and spontaneous GSR activates, which shows that nervous system is rather active. In other words. it is a very peculiar state of sympathetic ner while parasympathetic nerves are dominant. This, according to Hirai (1960), is a state in whi excitation of the cerebral cortex lowers and, at the same time, functions of brain stems are ri phenomenon.

Also, another characteristic of brain waves during Zazen is "dehabituation " of alpha-blockin alpha-blocking is the turning of alpha waves into beta waves with the repression from sound alpha waves appear. However, if the stimuli are presented repeatedly. it becomes habituate blocking will not occur. This phenomenon of habituation could be seen to laymen during Zaz would not occur to well-trained monks. They could hear every click clearly. This is referred to "dehabituation".

Kasamatsu and Hirai (1984) stated "in Zen meditation, the: slowing of the EEG pattern is co and the dehabituation of the alpha-blocking on the other. These indicate the specific change consciousness". These are not just a state of body and mind in relaxation. I think, it is rather balanced state of body and mind accompanied by tension within relaxation and fulfilment.

These are brought about by, as mentioned before, open eyes, suitable tension of muscle to long expiration. and concentration on respiration and their effects on each other, to keep the

I think, various psychotherapeutic effects could be produced in this state of body and mind. Ikemi (1995) observed that "essential role of autogenic self-control method like Zazen, Yoga invigorate inborn homeostasis and the function of self-control by leading specific psycho-phy state". and Shapiro (1980) also observed that "the person is in a relaxed, comfortable. and posture, he is able to self-observe with equanimity everything that comes into awareness: fe fantasies, guilts, decisions and other covert events (global desensitisation)".

Recently. studies of Yamaoka (1988) or Hagino et al. (1987) (1989) (Table 2) indicated nega toward Hirai's statement ; the slowing down to the beta train (stageIV) in frequency of brain Taniguchi (1992) stated that "questions concerning the early studies. such as intra-subject long-termed alterations were raised not only in Japan but in other countries".

These are the problems to be solved hereafter.

[VI] Zen and Health

SATORI in Zen is a kind of personality change. It is brought about by mutual interaction of A activities) and Static Zen (Zazen, in other words, regulation of body, respiration and regulati other words. It is brought about by every day activities including Zazen. As it has been ment mental stales in SATORI are expressed as 'SHUKYAKU-GOITSU", "MUGA", "ZAMMAI" etc will not occur with just these kinds of experiences alone. Such kind of experiences of SATO cognition and cognitive pattern and they lead him to look at things from new angles. Here, th changes refer to the changes of one's cognition. Then what kind of changes in cognition are these experiences in SATORI. Detailed explanation will be given afterwards, but it seems th summarised down to the following 2 points.

(1) It enables a person to face and observe the reality and accept it as it is.

(2) One would stop having an egocentric point of view and start seeing things from altruistic or would have a wider point of view. Then. what kind of changes do Zen practices cause to and one's actions?

(1) Changes in real life are seen.

(a) Inner resource to live every second with all one's energy occurs.

(b) One comes to be able to accept thc reality as it is. Tendency to escape or avoid difficult s decreases.

(c) Feelings of fullfillment and vigor appear.

(2) Anxiety or fear decreases.

Emotions are released and desensitisations arise in state of dynamic equilibrium in Zazen.

(3) Performing daily acts based on abdominal respiration becomes a habit.

(a) Performing physical functions are activated by abdominal respiration.

(b) Balances in autonomic nervous systems is recovered.

(d) Tolerance against stress is reinforced.

(4) One is released from attachment to the self.

A person's energy can all be used in actions in reality in state of MUGA (selflessness). For e seen in athletic technique, artistic expression, the perfection of behavior of NO (classical Jap drama) or SADO (tea ceremony).

(5) Ego-centric point of view ceases.

(a) Seeing things from other people's, or with wider point of view becomes possible.

(b) Creative ideas will not be restricted by a rigid frame of thinking.

SUMMARY

In this treatise. I considered about the relationship between Zen practice and self-control.

Zen practice consists of thc interaction between the Active Zen (concentrating of one's atten individual actions in daily life) and Static Zen (Zazen : regulation of body, regulation of respir regulation of mind).

SATORI is an intuitive awareness which is brought through changes of the way of experienc accumulation of these changes. A state in SATORI is psychophysiologically very peculiar.

It's a well balanced state of body and mind accompanied by tension within relaxation and ful than than just a state with body and mind in relaxation. SATORI would influence one's cogni could be possible for one to look at oneself and one's world from new angle.

These changes of the way of looking at things can be summarised down to the following 2 p

(1) It will be possible for a person to face and observe the reality and accept it as it is.

(2) One will stop having an ego-centric point of view and will start seeing things from an altru view or will have a wider point of view.
